Theologians Without Dogma By Msgr. P. M. H. Wynhoven

Will Rogers, after making a tour through Europe, visiting the heads of different countries, wrote a delightful book.

We have syndicate writers in this country who pose as theologians and write on learned subjects which they never studied and on which they have only their own personal opinion not even backed by solid reading.

The most ludicrous theologian without a portfolio that we have today is the columnist, Dorothy Thompson, wife of Sinclair Lewis.

She also has her set ideas about Rome's attitude in regard to Nazism. Communism and Hitler's Jew's are at the bottom of all her "opinionated" articles.

If this fair columnist would insist a little less on "I think" and "I don't" and I fear, and do a little more studying she would be in a better position, for instance, to state actual facts as to divorce and sexual fidelity in countries that frown on divorce and in those where marital cohabitation is accepted.

These theologians without dogma only had Will Rogers' sense of humor. Enjoying their game of bunce, their attitude and smartness would have a redeeming feature. But they look so ridiculously pitiful in their contrast with St. Paul's advice "not that we are sufficient to think anything of ourselves, as of ourselves."

Corrupt Catholic Politicians

The conviction of James J. Hines, powerful political leader in New York, on thirteen different indictments involving almost every form of corruption and venality in public affairs, is one of those things that makes decent Catholics squirm.

And the bold answer comes: "Roman Catholic." Then come revelations of almost a life-time of disregard of the seventh commandment, infidelity to oaths of office, underhanded dealings with underworld characters, and all the other rutenesses that only a corrupt politician can conceive.

It is needed for the record that such Catholics are the direct opposite of what their faith teaches them to be. We all know they are numerous almost every big city has examples in its political rings, but true Catholic faith teaches that such men shall burn and burn forever for their crimes, and the fact that they call themselves Catholics will not save them.
