EVERY community may well take pride in two factors which affect its civic well-being . . . its own status as a community, and the general progressiveness of the area of which it is a part. This city stands as a community that has grown consistently and well on the basis of its merit as a good place to live and work. Proud of its position as a city, it is no less proud of the far-reaching effectiveness of the activities which distinguish the entire locality surrounding it. As a part of the Rochester Diocese, this city shares in the widespread feeling of goodwill engendered by the growth in prestige and influence of the CATHOLIC COURIER, the newspaper which for 50 years has so well served the Catholic and public welfare of the entire diocesan area.
