Madame Rose Lummis

By REVEREND RALPH J. MEYER

ARTICLE XXIII

He knew nothing of her loan to his father; he knew nothing of her except the prompt business dealings he had had with her. He might have thought that being at a distance it was possible she would leave the mountains before the stipulated two weeks had elapsed; but like all who had ever seen her or had dealings with her he could not harbour any doubt.

The welcome check came and was repaid with interest within a week. A grateful acknowledgment arrived by return mail, with the proffered interest declined. She was much moved, and until her death no Christmas ever passed but that some little token of her gratitude went to greet him.

This incident is mentioned, not only for the trust and kindness shown her, but as a very rare experience to one so methodical and far-seeing as Madame Lummis had ever been. Indeed, her business ability was remarkable, and in no way was it more demonstrated than in her comfortable, almost elegant manner of living on so small an income.

Her generosity alone would lead one to imagine her possessed of much more than she really had—little more than a hundred pounds a year. While prudent and economical as to her own expenditure, she was comparatively lavish in giving to others, especially to those in need, feeling that our Lord would return all she gave a hundredfold, and her trust and child-like confidence were sometimes singularly rewarded.

PRAYERS ANSWERED

Once, during her early days at Simcoe, she feared that unless some unexpected help came, she could not continue her work, and she regretted very much having to relinquish all, just as she seemed to be succeeding. She thought of ways and means, but there seemed to be no way out of the difficulty.

Then in her usual straightforward way she went before the Blessed Sacrament, and poured out all her longings and fears to our Lord, saying: "If you want me to remain, you can give me the means; show me, dearest Lord, your holy will."

On returning to her room she found a letter from her cousin, Mr. William Lummis, who had kindly taken charge of her investments, in which he said: "I enclose a check for two hundred and fifty dollars which I realized this morning by selling your shares and reinvesting on equally good security." It was just the amount she needed.

During the later years of her life there was often a fear that her investments might prove a failure; the portion of her dowry she had asked the Society of the Sacred Heart to return to her to carry on the work among neglected missions, she wished to be returned to them intact at her death, and she made a deed of assignment to that affect. To her it was such a point of honor and justice that often she repeated that if anything were to happen she could not rest in her grave until that sum was paid to the Society.

KEEPS GOOD FRIDAY

Good Friday had always been to her a day of suffering, mental as well as physical her love for the Passion made the day very real. The order of that day, at Simcoe or in any of the missions where she happened to spend Lent, was ever the same. She drank merely a cup of coffee in the morning and tasted no food until mid-day; then there was silence through the house until 3 o'clock, the class room was darkened, and the large crucifix stood between two candles which burned the three hours; all betokened mourning and sadness. At two the people gathered, and the devotions, consisting of the seven dolour beads, St. John's history of the Passion, extracts from Mary at the foot of the Cross, all ending with the reading of the stations, were held.

We have spoken of the beauty of her voice and articulation, but in prayer or spiritual reading it was touching and devotional to a rare degree. She felt all she read, and transmitted her feeling to her hearers; one could never hear her pray without emotion. her very simplicity and sweetness were irresistible.

Those Good Friday devotions were attended by Protestants and Catholics alike, and the Negroes spoke of them many years afterwards; they appealed to all. One of her friends remembered on one such day among the mountain missions, bringing Madame Lummis' letters to her room when she was too ill to be out of bed, and was saving her strength for the afternoon.

Madame Lummis read through her mail, and suddenly her face became stricken with dismay; in an instant she raised her eyes, which were full of tears, saying: "What a grand day to get a blow." It was the bad news from her Simcoe lawyer that two thousand dollars of the seven lent her by the Society of the Sacred Heart were in danger of being lost—interest and principal. Not another word did she utter as she observed the day as usual, and held the devotions—no one dreaming that she was in trouble. It was, however, but a test that God had sent her; she had lost nothing in this but had gained much in the world to come.

Father Lord's column is enlivening, interesting, informing. "Along the Way" on editorial page.

New Problems

Priests of the Oriental Rites in Eastern Poland are suffering intensely. Many are now in prison, others are in exile in foreign countries. We ask you to help us to do something for these priests and their flocks.

A VILLAGE SCHOOL

Missionary Must Enlarge His School

Archbishop Lepretre, Apostolic Delegate in Syria, sent us this letter:

"Outside of the large cities, the Church in Syria is struggling to keep alive. This country is Mohammedan. The Christians are mostly of the Separated Church. Everywhere the Catholics are outnumbered.

Take for example the Village of Kousseir. There are over three thousand Mohammedans, about eleven hundred of the Separated peoples, and a handful of poor Catholics. While the picture is dark, there is one bright spot. In the Village there is a Catholic School with eighty pupils.

This School has done wonders for the Church. Not only do the Catholic children attend, but also some Mohammedans and many of the children of the Separated peoples. Last year three families became Catholic because of the school.

"Why do I write to you? Here is the reason. We must enlarge the school. At present it is only a two-classroom school. We must build an extension. This we can do for three hundred dollars. It will include also the purchase of desks and benches and other equipment.

"I wish you could realize what this will mean to our Church. It will mean more prestige and more converts. Please answer me. Do not place this letter aside and forget it. Our priests will always remember those who help us."

The letter of the Archbishop is given just as he wrote it. Our readers know the value and importance of the Catholic School. We hope they will answer. Send us what you can afford.
