Have Your Pastor for Dinner

The girls drove off with a happy laugh bidding the priest good-by. "How do you like my pastor, Cokie?" "I think he's charming. Doesn't he have a contagious smile? He seems so wholesome; makes one subconsciously feel the happiness of religion. And he must love to teach. I liked the way he called you 'Ira M. Francis Xavier,' trying to convert the world with one fell swoop. He paid you quite a compliment, telling you that you were as good a theologian as many a one that came out of the seminary. I suppose, from now on, I'll have to submit, with due humility,

According To The Doctor

"Poison" in big red letters is the word which should be clearly printed on medicine bottles and boxes containing poisons. Many poisonings occur in the bathroom. If poisons cannot be on hand the bottles should be plainly marked and to eliminate the danger of mistaking a bottle at night, pins should be inserted in the cork. Four of five pins in the cork of a bottle containing poison will warn you when reaching for the medicine chest that your hand is on a bottle containing poison. If there are children in the house, the poisonous drugs should be placed under lock and key. The medicine chest should be placed out of the reach of the small child. Accidents are bound to happen when the tiny tot can and does reach the medicine chest. If he doesn't get bottles and boxes all over himself, he eats laxative pills which taste like candy but contain strychnine, or he drinks some liquid which if taken in too large a quantity will prove fatal. All medicine containers containing poison should be labeled "Poison." Then, too, the small and crossbones on a red label have a psychic effect that will usually stop all but the most obstinate-minded. Do not take medicine in the dark. It is better to walk a step more and turn on the light than to swallow a mouthful of poison by mistake. All boxes and bottles of remedies should be marked with name, use, dosage and date of purchase. They should be tightly closed, and if possible, the bottles should have glass stoppers. Check up your medicine chest and protect your family from accidents which might result in their death. Label all medicines carefully and have some means of telling a substance containing poison from one which doesn't. Remember to have your medicine chest well out of the reach of small children.
