WASHINGTON—The need of young social workers, especially those who are interested in child health problems, was emphasized by Miss Katherine Leavitt, Chief of the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, in an address delivered to the students of the National Catholic School of Social Service in Washington, D. C., last night. Miss Leavitt spoke on "Arranging the National Foremost Artists with a Child and the Challenge." She said that the Children's Bureau is the nation's largest agency for the study and survey in all parts of the country, but that it is a large field and there is much to be accomplished in this regard. She said that the Bureau is in need of young social workers who are interested in child health problems.
