MILLIONS WILL HAVE FAITH SAYS SOVIET ATHEIST

NEW YORK.—There are 30,000 church communities in existence in Soviet Russia today. It is admitted by Yaroslavy, leader of the Russian Godless Movement, Dr. Boris Solonovitch, who fled from Russia in 1938, says in an article in Kozsalya, White Russian newspaper published here. The article quotes Yaroslavy as saying: "A few scores of millions of workers are still connected with church and religion. No where in Russia, the writer says, are the fires of religion extinguished, adding that the Government has lost the moral fight with religion over a period of 23 years. "The struggle between Communism and the family," Dr. Solonovitch says, "has been terminated. The Government has changed its tactics and assumed the role of guardian of the family. Strict laws against abortion and divorce have been introduced and Soviet family morale is being fostered. The ungodly picture in the field of education has not changed. Plans, methods, programs and directors are being changed, but there is a shortage of schools, books and school room appliances."
