Parish Mothers To Provide Catholic Chaplain Outfits

In response to the appeal of Catholic Chaplain's Aid Headquarters, the mothers of Mother of Sorrows Parish have organized themselves to provide an outfit for one of the A. large value, specially constructed for the purpose has been placed near the front entrance of the church and nearby is a list of articles needed. It is already being bought and turned out—surplices, lavals, towels, copinals, palls, albs and reversible vestments to add to the sacred vessels, missals, and other articles. The mothers hope to purchase from the returns of small house card parties during the autumn months.

The Catholic Chaplain Aid office in New York City states it is almost impossible to keep up with the constantly increasing number of Catholic Chaplains in the service and that many chaplains are still without adequate supplies of vestments because of lack of supplies.

Most Rev. John F. O'Hara, D.D., former head of Notre Dame University and now in the U.S. Army, is the Armed Forces of the United States and is therefore superior of all Catholic Chaplains.

Most of the copies of the CATHOLIC COURIER, going into the homes of Mother of Sorrows Parish each week are so appreciated after they have been read through. The chaplains to Catholic boys in the service.

Mothers At Mass For Soldier Sons

The blood of prayer for the boys in the service is being poured by the mothers of St. Salome's Parish whose sons are now in the service.

Mindful of the graces and blessings derived from such Masses, these mothers united in requesting the Rev. Father Jankowski to offer a few Masses each week for the spiritual welfare of the boys away from home. The 21. Masses Masses Sunday were offered for the past few months, has been offered for that purpose.

Fall brings with it a change of schedule, the High Masses 10:55 a. m. in the practice no longer possible, so in place of the low Mass each Sunday, one High Mass a month will be offered for the mothers' intention.

The date of each Mass will be announced far enough in advance so all who wish may attend. It is announced by one of the mothers.

Fete 90-Year-Old 'Grandma'

Cheerful and vigorous as she celebrated her 90th birthday, Mrs. Margaret Kohlmeier, 28th Ward, is in her 90th year. Her neighborhood, was feted and honored by relatives and friends on August 20, the eve of that birthday.

At the home of her daughter, Mrs. William H. Bonn, 8 Glider Street, with Mrs. Kohlmeier lives, a seemingly unending line of well-wishers called to felicitate her. The more than 100 guests had a dinner party in her honor in the 24th Ward Clubrooms across the street.

Mr. and Mrs. Bonn announced the marriage of their own daughter, Wilma, to George J. Bocel, son of Mrs. Ida Bocel, 5 Avery Street. A son of Mrs. Kohlmeier, Henry G. 291 Ames Street was celebrating his 45th wedding anniversary.

The only regretful note for "Grandma" who was the center of attention at the party was that another son, George, in California was unable to attend.

Mrs. Kohlmeier is frequently seen at the Communion Rail, is ready for a card game and will take care of her garden herself. She has one complaint that she is still "too young" not to be allowed to do the washing.

She is the sole survivor of 13 children of George Leonard, born August 22, 1851, who has remained in that neighborhood during her long span of life.

Her other daughter, Mrs. Frank Sauter, 29 Ames Street, another son, Francis J. Kohlmeier, 8 Lake View Terrace, 18 grandchildren and 15 great-grandchildren were present to honor "Grandma."

CHINESE WOMAN SAVES HER OWN LIFE BY RISKING IT

PERKING—Luman Service reveals the story of a Christian Chinese woman who saved her life by heroically risking it in the burning of the convent in Yuenling, Hunan.

Hearing the air-raid alarm, the woman, who was wearing a Catholic two years ago, took refuge with seven or eight others in a cluster of trees about half a mile from the convent. From there she saw the fire spread to the convent. Throwing discretion to the winds, the woman rushed out to save the building, or at least as much of the "sisters" belongings as possible.

Despite the scorching heat she continued her work as long as there was anything to save. The sisters were in another establishment across the river at the time. This time the fire saved the woman's life. A bomb falling among the trees where she had first taken shelter killed all those who had remained behind.

A True Account of A Sister of St. Joan of Arc

By Rev. Leopold W. Jaurissen, C. SS. CC.
On April 30, 1941, the Feast Day of the Patronage of Saint Joseph, I was called to St. Mary's Hospital in Rochester. . . . Lucienne St. Laurent, upstantul of the Sisters of Saint Joan of Arc, is very sick.

A few minutes later I was in the presence of a young lady of scarcely seventeen years, stricken by spinal meningitis, which caused her violent suffering, burning fever, and convulsions.

It was a pity to see her suffer, and yet, in spite of her sufferings, she was an object of admiration and edification. Even in her delirium she never ceased to offer prayers and to recite her beads. The Hall Mary followed one after the other, sometimes interrupted, sometimes accentuated by her sufferings and her delirious fever. This continued for hours. The words "now and at the hour of death" which fell from the lips of the dear sick one, never had a more impressive significance than at this moment.

In this state I administered her the Sacrament of Extreme Unction and all the help of Our Mother the Church, which in this condition she was able to receive.

During the painful sickness which lasted for more than two weeks, I visited the sick, once and again twice a day; sometimes she was delirious, most of the time she was conscious, with always a high expression of suffering. Her sufferings were intense, but delicious or not. Lucienne St. Laurent (who in a few days shall be called Sister Jeanne Lucie of the Sacred Heart) had received the Sacrament of all those who approached her.

When one is healthy, one may hide human weaknesses behind the mask of appearances, but serious sickness tears off this mask and shows man as he is. I am convinced that Lucienne St. Laurent was a good, humble, virtuous lady with a profound faith. In her sickness she proved to be so, she refused to be comforted, she was useful for this world. It is true, her intense sufferings caused her some signs of pain, but this was in spite of herself, and only in moments of weakness. "I don't want to show my suffering to others," she said, "but some times I can't help making a funny face. What a good child!" I saw her face, but she hid their decline, her soul raised to a greater intimacy with God and the Blessed Virgin, whom she loved tenderly.

At Indian Mission

Miss Gertrude O. E. F. celebrates her Golden Jubilee. She was sent to the Sioux Indians at Holy Rosary Mission, Pine Ridge, South Dakota, immediately after her profession, and has since that time lived with the Indians. She is now in the hospital at St. Mary's Hospital in Rochester, where she is being cared for by the Sisters of St. Mary's Hospital.

DO YOU ANTAGONIZE YOUR CHILDREN?

Emma Gary Wallace
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West 10th Street, New York City. These articles are appearing weekly in our magazine.

Parents sometimes are distressed to discover that there seems to be a natural antagonism between one or the other of them and one of their children. We are so accustomed to the acceptance of the idea that children should always be subservient to their parents—obedient and docile—that it is sure to give the older members of the family a jolt when they find that quite the opposite condition exists. In order to avoid such an unpleasant situation, it will be wise to find out what usually causes such antagonisms. Whenever this condition has developed, unless we locate the root of the matter, we shall not be able to apply the right remedy.

First of all, parents themselves need to live together harmoniously. This requires that they be considerate in their association and in their treatment of each other. If differences are to be avoided and irritating, and there is bickering, fault-finding and criticism, the child will naturally take the part of one or the other, or else develop a prejudice or antagonism toward both. It cannot be otherwise.

Donald loves his mother. When he sees his daddy do something or hear him say something which he dislikes, he is annoyed and perhaps awakens a quick retort from her, or brings the tears to her eyes. Donald will be sure to feel antagonistic toward his father.

In the same way, Mary's mother may be obviously careless of the comfort and likes and dislikes of Mary's father. In this case, the daughter is more than likely to develop an antagonism toward her mother.

Second, many parents awaken antagonism by over-much nagging and fault-finding. Inevitably some of this nagging is unfair and does more harm than it can possibly do good. Both parents should avoid such casual young friendships as are difficult to correct.

Third, selfishness and a lack of understanding on the part of some parents causes antagonisms. All parents have girls as well as boys among their children now, as it is natural that he should at his age, great deal of fault with every one of these girls, instead of accepting such casual young friendships as are of no great importance. To appear to take them too seriously is apt to antagonize a boy, and the mother who does this will very likely find herself shut out from the inner circle of her son's life.

This lack of sympathetic consideration should be guarded against, just as much when the child is a daughter.

It is selfish for parents to make too heavy a demand upon the time and companionship of either a son or a daughter, and to feel that such sacrifice is their due.

Fourth, parents antagonize their children when they are reluctant to give credit for ingenuity or native resources or initiative on the part of son or daughter. There is no need to make children vain or egotistical by too much praise, but at least the parents should be ready to say, "That's an excellent idea! Try it!" or "An excellent idea! Try it!" or "An excellent idea! Try it!"

Make an effort frequently to get your children's viewpoints, so that you may see yourself as they must see you. Remember they are alert and keen of mind.
