The Need of the Hour

What we need most at the present hour is an awakened sense of personal obligation toward the missions, first out of gratitude for the benefits and blessings with which Christianity has enriched our lives and then out of duty to do all we can to further this apostolate. Can we who are indebted to Christ through His missionaries for all that makes life worth living refuse to help with others to His light and truth and love?

Baptism of Blood

Work among the Kanakas of East New Guinea according to the missionaries is quite successful. Twelve baptisms are counted annually and there are already many schools. Thus while the Kanakas are rude and uncivilized they show a conscientious, genuine background and sometimes a truly deep and sincere faith.

Changing Times

In modern warfare more than in ancient times are as absolute necessities as the uniforms of the men of the line. They are considered the expression of the nation's will to be subjected to the incessant charge and countercharge of attack and retreat and invasion. They share in every way the fate of war itself.
