Vacation Schools Totaled 59, Reports Director

A total of 4,125 children in 59 schools, two more schools than last year, is the report on the Rochester diocese, it is announced today by the Rev. George Vogt, diocesan director of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine.

While the number of schools increased there was a falling off of 1,200 children in attendance. This is attributed by Father Vogt to a plentiful supply of jobs and a constant enrollment in the parish schools.

Making his report the director states: "In one department we feel we have made a great advance in the material or text-books used by the children. The question of text-books is an urgent one in all departments of the instruction of public school children. When we see efforts of priests to make converts to the Church we feel the effort to run 58 Vacation Schools is well worth the trouble. The Vacation School supplements the instruction given through the school year."

Vacation Schools "as a home missionary project" were "aided greatly" by donations from: Nazareth College, Sacred Heart School, Holy Family School, Aquinas Institute and the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae Funds given by those groups were used by the Director in printing the project-books used by the children.

With census returns incomplete the Confraternity director estimates that close to 30,000 Catholic children of grade and high school age are being educated in the public schools of the diocese.

"And as educate is a much more serious proposition" declares Father Vogt, "than instruct" we can see at a glance how serious is the need for the best Christian instruction we can give them.

But note that the best we can give is "instruction" and not "education." The reports show one interesting thing, where released time is used the percentage of children who do not receive instructions is smaller than 5 per cent.

Western worth a dozen 'Honky Tonks'

"Lydia"—A-2
Julien Duvivier, who directed "Un Carnet du Bal" that unforgettable French film about a woman seeking her lost loves, has now come out with his first American film since "The Great Waltz." The new picture, "Lydia," also deals with the encounter of a woman with four men who had loved her but this time Duvivier, instead of showing what has happened to the men in the meantime, shows how the former romances progressed by the flashback method.

In "Lydia" Merle Oberon in a masklike make-up reminisces about the loves she has known and the film moves slowly with a lot of talking and philosophizing through various romances. The star plays ably, although at times her performance seems just a trifle mannered. As the men in her life, Joseph Cotton, who was so admirable in "Citizen Kane," Alan Marshal, one of the most handsome romantic leading men, Hans Jarry, an interesting new foreign actor and George Reeves are subordinate to Miss Oberon, but most of them manage to register. Edna May Oliver sketches one of her sharply amusing characterizations and there are briefly effective pieces by Sara Allgood and John Halliday. It is a satisfactory romantic piece in a sentimental vein, but it cannot compare in strength or characterizations with any of Duvivier's French films.

John Springer reminisces about popular pictures of the past on "Your Movie Memory" over WSAJ very Monday morning at 11. This week's Movie Memory will be the Madeleine Carroll-Fred MacMurray comedy, "Cafe Society."
