Takes Lead In Notre Dame Play

Shakespeare and Notre-Dame once again became fast friends on the nights of December 15 and 16 with the production of 'Merry Wives of Windsor' in Washington Hall on the Notre Dame University campus...

This delightful farcical comedy featuring an all amateur cast, was highly received by capacity crowds, enjoying hugely the none-too-subtle antics of Sir John Falstaff and his typically Elizabethan rogues...

Particularly complimented in the performance was the smoothness with which the cast delivered the difficult Shakespearean diction, and their success was evident in the happy reactions of the audience to the richness of plot and dialogue...

Spreading pre-Christmas merriment in the person of Falstaff, offsetting the problems of a troubled world for two nights was William N. Hakey of Chicago 'Ford' and 'Page', two gentlemen of Windsor, were portrayed with great success by David J. Curtin of Rochester, N. Y. and Jerome F. Heinlen of Garrett, Ind.

Directing the large scale production was the Rev. Matthew A. Coyle, C. S. C., head of the University Dramatic Club. Assisting him was Prof. Cecil Birdge who aided particularly in training boys of St. Patrick's School in South Bend as 'urchins, couples and fairies' in the bewitched woods of Windsor.

The Increment of Hatred

The brutality used by the Nazis to put down incipient revolt in the occupied countries will bear extortionate interest for decades, perhaps generations, to come. Restiveness has become rebellion, interior non-conformity has been externalized in a series of flare-ups all across the darkened face of Europe, from the Arctic seas to the gates of the east...

Self-elation is a steep and dizzy flight, on which there is no room to build. - St. Hildegard.
