Thawing Out Frozen Pipes Is Real Task

The approach of zero weather brings to the fore the problem of what to do and what not to do in the unwelcome event of water pipes freezing.

Thawing frozen water pipes is not a job for the handyman. Plumbing experts warn. There is a definite possibility that considerable damage may result if the householder relies on his own remedies or those of some other unqualified person.

FHA technical experts point out that the use of blow torches is particularly risky. A blow torch in the hands of a person not familiar with its uses may result either in an explosion due to the accumulation of excessive steam or in a fire due to overheating of the pipe.

Frozen pipes can best be handled by experienced plumbers or heating contractors. They are familiar with the problem, and many of them now have special electrical or steaming equipment which enables them to thaw pipes rapidly with complete safety.

FHA experts advise that pipes which are so located as to be susceptible to freezing should be either retreated or insulated with good pipe covering. Fund for such work or for the replacement of worn pipes which are often likely to freeze and crack, may be obtained from qualified lending institutions under the Modernization Credit Plan of the FHA.

Cellar in House Often Is Omitted

Contrary to the old idea there are times when it is preferable to eliminate the basement in a home. FHA officials say.

While the cellar of a house did in the old days serve some real purpose for storing food etc. it now has no definite function and unless the topography of the lot makes excavation of a cellar necessary it is often well to leave it out of the plan.

Certain types of furnaces of recent design are placed beneath the floor and throw the heat upward. However there are types of furnaces suited for a house which lacks a cellar, and even the makers of hot air furnaces have designed new types of equipment for houses which do not have basements. It is often less expensive and more economical to install central heating in nonbasement houses.

Removing Rust Stain Is A Simple Process

If rust stains on the cement floor of the garage are one of life's occasional problems for you this time of year as they are for many car owners, and ordinary scrubbing doesn't take them out, here's a treatment with glycerine an important ingredient, under which even the most stubborn stains and marks will usually come clean. It's simple too.

Dissolve one part of sodium citrate in six parts of water and mix thoroughly with an equal volume of glycerine. Mix a portion of this solution with powdered washing soda to form a paste that is just stiff enough to be spread on a stain in a thick coat. This will dry in a few days after which it should be replaced by a new layer or softened by the addition of more of the glycerine-containing liquid.

Several applications may be necessary but the results usually warrant the effort. Quicker results may be achieved by using ammonium citrate instead of sodium citrate, but it may injure polished surfaces to some slight extent.

Q. Should fireplaces be equipped with an ash dump?

A. Ash dumps are not a necessity but are desirable for removing ashes from the fireplace. They should empty into a concrete or masonry chamber provided with a metal clean-out door.

Q. Why should masonry chimneys be capped?

A. This is done to prevent water from seeping down through the masonry. The top surface of the cap should be well sloped to the outside edges of the chimney in order to drain off water and melting snow as rapidly as possible.
