The article defines liberty as applying the flatins internally and externally. Autonomy, it says, involves their freedom with regard to internal affairs and independence their liberty in relation to other flatins. "Without liberty there is no independence," it side, "and independence without integrity and security is only an apparent independence. The right of liberty of every nation is at the heafs, not only of the life of single flates, but also of deoperation among flatics."

The Osserviters article reminds that it is appaking of "liberty according to the Christian ethic," whereby them are moral obligations as servasponding to watural rights and assets that "only in living and acting according to the

His Holiness Pope Pius XII, the message of Bishop Barrere emphalizes, is the greatest promoter of peace among nations; a peace "founded in justice, charity and the other postulates of Christian morals" since he is "impartial and bove terrestrial interests.

Deploring the false propaganda that is being disseminated through-out the world, the Bishop says: How few there are, even among Catholics, who realize that they are responsible before God for the injustices that others commit, both in the material and moral order, because they accept these false counsels and give them strength."

"Let us pray, then," says Blahop Barrere in conclusion, "with re-newed fervor that this horrible world tragedy may cease before long; that it may terminate in a lasting peace to be founded in justice, charity and pardon for wrongs."
