the center of the stage.

At first relatives and sometimes occasional callers teased Robert about having his "nose put out of joint" because so much attention was being given to the baby.

Robert was manifestly troubled.

"Young children are often jeal-ous." Mother and Daddy had some-times remarked, "but he'll soon get over that and love his little brother as much as the rest of us do." Occasionally, they made a special effort to pet and make much of Robert, for they did not want him to feel pushed wide or restleted Robert, for they did not want him to feel pushed aside or neglected. As time went on, he became interested in Baby Tony, often playing with him and being amused by his cuto little ways.

When the time came for Robert to go to school, he seemed to have no difficulty in getting along with the other children, but for some reason or other, he was listless and inclined to daydrsam.

One of his teachers reported to his mother that Robert did not appear to be enthusiastic about any-

At first relatives and sometimes and was plainly enjoying it.

We often are reminded that the we often are reminded that the older child may be jealous when the new baby first arrives. The condition is usually treated as only of passing significance and character. It is thought that shortly the older child will become accustomed to the new member of the family and make the heat of the family and make the best of the situation.

But this attitude is entirely wrong. The older child should, from the first, not be obliged to endure but be helped to enjoy the little stranger. It should be his buby-needing his love and care. Then, he will be giad to share with him. It will please him that his mother and father are Baby's mother and father too. Instead of suffering a feeling of loss and insecurity, he will gain a delightful sense of importance and, responsibility.
