St. Vincent (Corning)
Fr. Newcomb Gives Address
At Graduation Exercises

CORNING — The Rev. John C. Newcomb, assistant pastor at St. Mary's Church, was the speaker at the graduation exercises of St. Vincent de Paul's School on Friday evening, June 19, in the Church. Father Newcomb addressing the graduates said in part:

"It will be well for you, to recall all the sacrifices that have been made in order that you might have Christ with you. There has been an enormous sacrifice of expense on the part of your parents in sending you to a parochial school. There has been the lifetime sacrifice of all that the world holds legitimately dear on the part of your teachers; there has been the constant and anxious solicitude as well as the financial worries of your pastor in maintaining this school; to say nothing of the misunderstandings of our non-Catholic friends and neighbors over the purpose and function of our parochial school system. All these factors must be taken into consideration in order for you to appreciate properly what you have accomplished tonight."

"We may better appreciate the task that has faced your parents and will face you if we borrow from the phraseology of the present war to state that we, all Catholics are engaged, have been engaged in, and will be engaged in an all out war against the enemy of God and the enemy of man. And it has always been and will be a total war, engaging every possible means, and every single person, and anything at all that will disarm the common enemy of God and Man, the Devil."

"Your training, my dear young people began very early for the struggle that you will be engaged in till the very end of your lives. If you seek the why and wherefore of all the extra burdens that Catholics take upon themselves, there is the briefest and clearest answer. What will be your contribution to this great struggle? The salvation of your own soul. One thing is necessary, your salvation. God, your Church, your pastors, your parents, your friends ask you only one thing, the success of your training in this school has only one norm, viz: the salvation of your own soul. You can best contribute to the welfare of your family, your parish, your city, your country and your Church, if you concentrate all your efforts on this one thing of saving your own soul."

"This war is not merely another war on the old pattern and for the usual aims of the past wars of history. It is a struggle such as would defy the very epic powers of Homer, Virgil, Dante and Milton to describe. For we are in the throes of a world-wide revolution. Modern invention has changed the pattern of life very considerably in a generation, and what the pattern of life very considerably in a generation, and what the pattern of life will be after this war, I do not dare to predict,—for I am no prophet, except to say that it will be something very, very different from what you've known until now."

"This world-wide struggle will surely come to an end and the forces which we are upholding will surely be victorious. But the other struggle between Christ and Satan will never come to an end until the end of time. We can look forward to cessation of this present diabolical attack of a few nations against the human race, but in that other struggle we shall be taking part until the very moment of our deaths. This is what I would warn you of tonight, when I say that now you're going to begin to carry your own crosses."

The scholarship prize for the highest average was awarded to Joseph Dailey. Other members of the class were Raymond Cotter, Donald Scaroeder, Richard Troll, Joseph Carapella, Pasquale Del'sante, Raymond Kuss, Ramono Deghequi, Ruth Kuntz, Margaret Fey, Mary Lou Sheedy, Victoria Gramoglia, Mary Vieira, Lucille Bonomo, Elizabeth Aloita, Lucy D'Arcangelo, Joan Rosetti, Helen Durkin, Rose Giardina, Anna Ruvolo, Anna Carlino and Mary Cusneilli.
