Fordham Curriculum Meets Wartime Need

With a program geared to the requirements of National Defense Fordham University will insugue ate its scholastic year in the first week of September. From present indications the registration will be normal but at that time the entire University, with the exception of the Graduate School will be on the accelerated program designed to give students every opportunity to complete their college and professional cursers before induction into the armed forces of the United States,

Several of the schools have alrendy started the accelerated prohave been continuing their studies right through the summer and will complete their Senior year in Januery. The Law School and the Coland in the College of Pharmary for be beaten.

Commission Available The Navy and the Naval Air Corps will continue their enlistments for those forces and the direction of programs for those students who take them. A particularly important feature in connection with these courses is a change in the curriculum of Fordham College which now permits Freshmen in the Bachelor of Arts course to take courses in Mathematics and Physics which formerly they could not take in their Junior and Senior

One of the important features of the Fordham program of particular interest to those engaged in civilian defense will be the con-tinuance of the First Aid classes inaugurated last Winter under the direction of Dr. Leonard Plocoli Professor of Pharmacy College in the University. The instruction has also been given to Police and Fire Units in the Greater New York

Change in Location

Two important changes in locahave taken piace during the month of August. The School of Business and the former Manhattan Invision of Fordbam College both formerly located in the Woolworth moved to the campus. The School of Business will occupy its own building on the campus, Collins Hall which is centrally located on the West campus. The day stu-dents of the Downtown College will be absorbed in Fordham College, the evening class will be continued on the campus. A greater integration and centralization of the University will result, providing as it will an opportunity for all to participate in the extra-cur-ricular activities of College life which are only truly obtained on the University's own grounds.
