SAN FRANCISCO—Private First Class Eugene O. Moore, U.S.M.C., who was trapped inside his tank on the Solomons by 65 Japs and fought his way out with the help of a nearby Marine sniper, wrote his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles K. Moore, here, that "we had a little fight on our hands, but every thing is all right now."

The letter, dated Aug. 12, arrived after a Requiem Mass had already been offered here in St. Mary's Cathedral, where he attended. The Mass followed the receipt of a telegram on Sept. 24 from the Marine Corps telling of his "death" on Aug. 8. The Rev. Martin Gullfoyle said the Requiem Mass, but after official word on Oct. 7 that Moore was wounded and not dead, a Mass of Thanksgiving was said in the Cathedral by the Rev. Robert Cullen.

Moore, who was not seriously wounded, was in a tank that was cornered by the enemy who dipped open the hatch, threw grenades into it and set it afire. Smoke and flames drove him out of the machine after the others in the crew had been killed. The Japs grabbed him, hurled him to the ground, kicked him, jabbed him with a pitchfork, knifed him then picked him up and bounced him off the side of the tank.

"I guess they thought I was dead," a Marine combat reporter quoted him as saying in a southwest Pacific hospital after his evacuation from the Solomons. "I had a quite a bit of blood on me and I was unconscious."

The message of his escape was received by Mrs. Moore with the exclamation, "This is the best news in the world!"

Moore was born in Huron, S. Dak., and his baptism took place in St. Martin's Church there. As a boy, he sang in St. Martin's choir and later became a member of the Knights of Columbus there. He came to San Francisco in March, 1941. In Oct. 13, 1941, he enlisted in the Marines, and received his training at San Diego.

Private Moore's experiences are regarded as constituting one of the most thrilling stories to come out of the present war.

Major Catholic Intercollegiate Football Action

WEEK OF OCT. 31
By Elmer Grapensteter, Jr.

Four Catholic universities, of the six that remained undefeated and untied, fell off the bandwagon last week. This leaves only Boston College and Detroit to carry the banner into next Saturday's competition. However, Notre Dame has risen magnificently in the last two weeks and must be considered one of the nation's best. Last week's score—6 hits, 5 misses. So don your safety belts, for here we go again:

1. Boston College over Georgetown: Boston College should glide over this hurdle without too much difficulty although these two are bitter rivals.

2. St. Bonaventure over Canisius: Another acute rivalry—however Canisius is weak while Bonaventure is strong.

3. Colgate over Holy Cross: I went against the Crusaders last week and they won very close.

4. Manhattan over Villanova: Manhattan surprised everybody by beating Duquesne last week. Although grid games aren't won on past performances, the New Yorkers should win again.

5. St. Mary's over Fordham: For years Fordham has stepped all over St. Mary's. This year however the Gaels should reverse the proceedings.

6. Detroit over Marquette: Our other hopeful runs up against an excellent eleven. Very close.

7. Notre Dame over Navy: Notre Dame on the records should annihilate the Middles, but Navy always puts up a great fight against the Irish.

8. Santa Clara over San Francisco: I wasn't the only one disappointed in the Broncos' loss last week. Still think they have a good team and should beat the Dons next Sunday.

Total results to date: 12 hits, 11 misses.
