BUENOS AIRES. — To defend the morality of customs is to defend the country, the Rev. Esteban di Pasqua, Ecclesiastical Counselor of Argentine Catholic Action, said in a radio address which was broadcast nationally. He spoke under the auspices of the League for the Defense of Morals and Good Customs, and directed his remarks specifically against "certain customs, estraneous to our atmosphere and our traditions, and positively injurious to the physical and moral health of our people."

While other countries are at war, and naturally concerned primarily with the tragedies war entails, Father di Pasqua believes Argentina should show appreciation for being at peace by concentrating on the "defense of the interior life of the country, gravely threatened by a degradation of customs and a lowering of moral standards."

"The Church," he said, "has never monopolized the right to preach and act against vice. First of all she calls upon parents to accept their responsibilities with respect to their children. In the second place, she reminds civil authorities of their duty to protect the moral health of the nation."

Municipal authorities should guard against the poisoning of youthful minds by pornographic literature and undecent motion pictures, dance halls and so-called places of amusement, as thoroughly and seriously as they act against the merchant who sells tainted food, Father di Pasqua asserted.
