Army Chaplains Trained To Care For All When Needed

Chaplains being trained for the armed services are so well instructed that in case of need they can handle the religious services of all denominations, it is shown in a sequence of "Army Chaplain," third of the RKO Radio two-reel pictures under the general title of "This Is America."

Wherever there is only one chaplain available, this picture reveals, all sects can be ministered to as though by a chaplain of their own denomination, whether Protestant, Catholic or Jew.

The training of chaplains for the armed forces thus plays an important part in creating tolerance of all creeds.

It has been announced that the requests for Bibles and the number of soldiers attending religious services have risen far out of proportion to civilian habits. Bibles are not distributed unless specifically requested and there is no compulsion.

At camp the chaplain is the intermediary between the officers in command, the medical office, the prison office and the soldiers. He performs psychiatric duties as well as religious ones, and it is through his efforts that the soldier finds his proper niche in the service.

Aside from his duties at cantonments, the chaplain is shown in "Army Chaplain" in his important role of "quartermaster of the spirit" on the firing line, ministering to spiritual and material requirements of the men.

Plan Your Day

Every morning compose your soul for a tranquil day and all through it be careful often to recall your resolution and bring yourself back to it.

CRITIC PICKS FILM BASED ON GEO. COHAN'S LIFE

UNION CITY, N. J.—Jerry Cotter, drama critic of "The Sign," has selected as his choice for the best motion picture of 1942 "Yankee Doodle Dandy," the Warner Brothers picturization of the life of the late George M. Cohan.

Mr. Cotter termed the picture "a deserved tribute to the greatest personality and most versatile showman the American theater has yet produced" and lauded the star, James Cagney, as "genuinely surprising as the sprightly song-and-dance man."

Drift Away

Gazing on the Crucifixion,
Here before me as I pray,
Earthly thoughts and restless longings
Drift away;
Drift away — the great world seeming
But a busy hum of life;
Peace within my soul displacing
Weary strife.

'Quiz' Corner

If a person seems to worry over much about being saved is he guilty of the sin of despair?

Not necessarily. Despair is the abandonment of all hope of salvation or of the means required for it. A mere anxiety about one's future state, or fear that one may be lost is not necessarily despair. Despair is more the deliberate yielding to the conviction that human nature cannot cooperate with God's grace, that one's sins are unpardonable, or that Almighty God has cast one away. It is an offense against God's goodness and mercy, temptation to which should be resisted not only for moral but also for physiological reasons, since it commonly results in melancholy or in mental indulgence.

A non-Catholic friend of mine who likes med lingon in our church and noticed there was a gold-colored fringe around it. He said that was because the Pope had ordered the U. S. flag to be surrounded by this gold-colored fringe and that it was against the regulations of our country. I believe he is wrong but cannot confirm. This is just another one of those silly rumors thought up by people who have nothing better to do. The flags carried by all regiments of the U. S. Army have a gold fringe; that's the regulation and your friend was that it is for ceremonial purposes only, such as when the colors are carried in the parade with a gold fringe.

Since it was explained that God came to die for our salvation, it is not obvious that His death should atone the sin of Adam, Peter and others?

While acknowledging the difficulties which will always present themselves in this connection, we must insist, upon the fact that Judas and Pilate were free agents whose actions were not caused by the death of Christ. Judas was warned several times by Our Lord Himself, and even Pilate received a warning from his wife; yet both persisted in their sin. God's foreknowledge of the choice, which the sinner makes, does not in any way destroy the freedom of that decision.
