

Army Chaplains Trained To Care For All When Needed

Chaplains being trained for the armed services are so well instructed that in case of need they can handle the religious services of all denominations, it is shown in a sequence of Army Chaplain... third of the KO Radio two-reel pictures...

Whenever there is only one chaplain available, this picture reveals, all sects can be ministered to as though by a chaplain of their own denomination...

The training of chaplains for the armed forces thus plays an important part in creating tolerance of all creeds.

It has been announced that the requests for Bibles and the number of soldiers attending religious services have risen far out of proportion to civilian habits...

As camp the chaplain is the intermediary between the officers in command, the medical office, the prison officer and the soldiers...

Aside from his duties at camp, the chaplain is shown in "Army Chaplain" in his important role of "quartermaster of the spirit" on the firing line...

'Quiz' Corner

If a person seems to worry over much about being saved in his quality of the sin of despair?

Not necessarily. Despair is the abandonment of all hope of salvation or of the means required for it. A mere anxiety about one's future state is not despair.

It commonly results in melancholy, or in fatal indulgence.

A non-Catholic friend of mine saw the Stars and Stripes in one church and noticed there was a gold-colored fringe around it. He said that was because the Pope had ordered the U. S. flag to be surrounded by this gold-colored fringe...

This is just another one of those silly rumors thought up by people who have nothing better to do. The flags carried by all regiments of the U. S. Army have a gold fringe: that's the regulation and your friend ran and hid it if he came to look the matter up. Hence there is nothing wrong with having a flag bordered with a gold fringe.

How it was expedient for a God-man to die for our salvation, is it not strange that His death should cause the sin of Judas, Pilate and others?

While acknowledging the difficulties which will always present themselves in this connection, we must insist upon the fact that Judas and Pilate were free agents whose actions were not caused by the death of Christ. Judas was warned several times by Our Lord Himself, and even Pilate received a warning from his wife; yet both persisted in their sin. God's foreknowledge of the choice, which the sinner makes, does not in any way destroy the freedom of that decision.
