HISTORIC TABERNACLE IN CAMP

Father Vincent Murray, O. S. B., Chapter of the Augustinians, was with the group at Washington, D. C., gathered in the new St. Paul Church, standing before the tabernacle recently used by Archbishop John Carroll and loaned to Father Murray by the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, for exhibition. The group will meet with Father John Carroll at the Congressional Cathedral in Canada in an effort to win over the Catholics to the American cause during the War for American Independence. (O-G-V-C)

Educational Principles

The only education in Catholic schools is not the education of the intellect, but the education of the soul. The education of the intellect is the education of the body, and the education of the soul is the education of the spirit. The education of the spirit is the education of the heart, and the education of the heart is the education of the mind. The education of the mind is the education of the will, and the education of the will is the education of the character. The education of the character is the education of the person, and the education of the person is the education of the world.

Education of Higher Learning

The best of the education of the soul is the education of the heart. The education of the heart is the education of the mind, and the education of the mind is the education of the will. The education of the will is the education of the character, and the education of the character is the education of the person. The education of the person is the education of the world, and the education of the world is the education of the soul.

TIMELY ETERNALS

 Editor-in-Chief, Catholic Action of the South

DEAR MOTHER-IN-LAW

The clock came to the hour with the request, "May I get off tomorrow afternoon? I'd like to go to my mother-in-law's funeral." The generous and considerate manager promptly granted permission. The next afternoon, he asked his grieving clerk at the opening game of the baseball season, and the morning following, the deceitful employee was at work called on the carpet and berated for telling a lie. He protested, and insisted: "I will would like to go to my mother-in-law's funeral, as my wife and I could live in peace."

Are the proverbial incriminations launched against wives or husbands' mothers based on fact? They must be, to a certain extent, in some cases; for, where there is smoke, there is fire. And yet, it is a most marvellous situation, because the people involved, aided, by nature and circumstance, be bent on promoting one another's happiness.

Why, then, is the devil of discussion so successful, in many cases? At the bottom of it all is nothing else but petty jealousy. First of all, Mama's baby boy or daughter has, at least partly, transferred his or her affections to someone else. Mother isn't entirely it any more; an outsider has taken her place in the heart of her adored child. Then, it can happen that the chances one does not measure up to the mother's personal expectations. Her son or daughter could have done as much better; hence, the in-law is not looked upon with a great deal of approving sentiment. This and mental state on the part of Mother-in-Law, is, unfortunately, not always hidden, with the result that her married child is not made happy by her attitude, and the young husband or wife harbors a feeling of resentment toward her.

If the young couple are making their own home, and are living away from Mother, conditions generally work out more favorably—provided, of course, that no policy be adopted of running to the above-described mother every time there is a cloud on the horizon. Quoting Mother, in a case like that, is pouring oil on fire. No matter how wise and good Mother's advice may be, it is always angrily rejected, on principle, by the third party. Young married people always should endeavor to settle their little troubles, dis-

...and disagreements by themselves.

Living in the same house often is almost a direct invitation to strained relations. This holds particularly good when a daughter-in-law is made to live with her mother-in-law. The young wife is naturally inclined to set up or rearrange the home according to her ideas. It is an equally good guess that the mother-in-law would tolerate anyone upsetting her home with "newfangled notions." If a particular dish, cooked by one, is greatly relished by the whole family, the other feels pained because her yesterday's attempt did not get the same high commendation and so on. Every day there is some little thing to stumble over, and the conclusion seems inescapable that Mother-in-Law is simply impossible. Real unhappiness sets upon nothing more substantial than petty jealousy.

Resentful mothers will realize that when son or daughter has made up his or her mind to get married, there is nothing much in the world to prevent the darling from going into this alliance with "the sweetest girl in the world" or "the finest boy in creation." This is the young people's personal opinion and conviction, and nobody can change their minds on the subject. For the simple reason, they are head-over-heels in love. Another angle that should not be overlooked is the fact that they intend to get married for their own happiness, not for Mama's.

That love's vision may sometimes be very blurred or unperceptive, is true. But, it is equally true that no scullion can correct the melody, with even the best set of spectacles. Therefore, Mother or old man, up her mind and be "lucky one" does not fully meet her requirements. As long as he or she does not provoke criticism of a fundamental nature, Mother will do wisely to put her frustrated hopes out of her mind and to take the new family organization, with genuine good feeling, to her bosom.

All mothers-in-law have the same dear desire to see their children happy. This is a constant urge.

Some, however, overlook the essential fact that, when a child is old enough to get married and throw in his or her lot with one

Prolete, Aged 56, Writes Four Books Within One Year

NEW YORK—Writing four books in condensed form of an accomplished writer's life is a feat. To do the same work within a year is regarded as remarkable. But to write four books in a year when the author is 56 years old is something really noteworthy.

But that is what the Rt. Rev. Msgr. John J. Burke, of Paris, has accomplished. His books, published here by the Longhorn Press and all written during 1931, are: "Trials and Triumphs," "The World's History," "The Catholic of War," and "The Miracles of the Mother." Each of the books has drawn praise from reviewers and critics.

Msgr. Burke was born in Avon, Ill., on Jan. 1, 1875. He was ordained in 1899. He made several trips to foreign lands and wrote two books while pastor of St. Mark's Church, Birmingham, Ill. He was named a Domestic Prelate in 1931. A few years ago was elected as pastor of St. Mark's.
