Day Too Precious

Tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and merrily and with too high a spirit to be numbered with your former nonesense. This day is all that it good and fair. It is too precious, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.

From the rock-bound coast of Maine to the sunny slopes of the Pacific, one people, one nation, one star—and fifty conflicting solutions of a rubber shortage.

St. Patrick —Patron Of Ireland

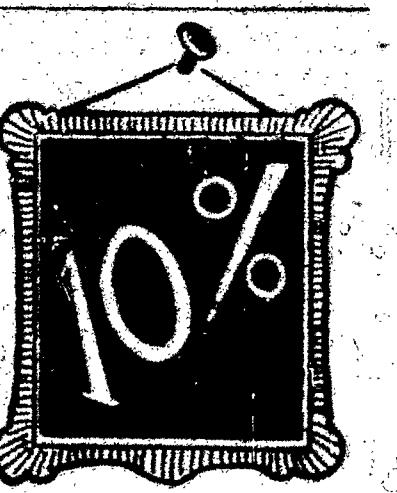

BY MARYANN BARBON
March 17th, next Wednesday, is the Feast of St. Patrick, a saint dear to the heart of every Irishman. St. Patrick was born in the middle of the Fourth Century in a village called Bonaventura, France. His father was of a good family named Calpurnius and his mother's name was Conchessa, a near relative of St. Martin of Tours.

St. Patrick says that at the age of sixteen he was still ignorant of God, meaning that he was ignorant of devout knowledge and fervent love of God for St. Patrick was always a Christian. At the age of sixteen he was taken captive by certain barbarians and taken to Ireland, where he was obliged to keep cattle on the mountains amidst snow, rain and ice with the added trial of being hungry all the time. When he lived in this condition, "God had pity on his soul and quickened him to a sense of duty by the impulse of a strong interior grace." St. Patrick prayed and fasted and grace grew in his soul. After he had spent six months in slavery, he was delivered by God in a dream to return to his own country. After great trials and tribulations he reached his destination. When he was at home with his parents God manifested to him by visions that he was destined to bring about the conversion of Ireland.

St. Patrick was ordained by St. Germain of Auxerre and made a Bishop by another Saint, Pope Celestine I. He returned to Ireland as a missionary and labored for sixty years to convert people and he preached the gospel where the worship of idols was the worship of the people. He traveled over the whole island, penetrating into the most remote parts of the country, preaching and baptizing. He ordained clergymen, persuaded women to live virtuous lives, and consecrated virgins to Christ. Great numbers embraced the holy state and wished to confer riches on St. Patrick which he declined for he wished to be poor with Jesus Christ.

St. Patrick held several councils to settle matters pertaining to the discipline of the church. St. Bernard and the tradition of Ireland tell that he fixed his metropolitan seat at Armagh. He not only converted the whole country by preaching and wonderful miracles but made Ireland a favorite spot in the sight of God and a country of saints.

Through the ages the name of St. Patrick has held a high position in the hearts of Catholics. Through his years of missionary work, he restored sight to the blind, health to the sick and raised nine persons to life. He died and was buried in Ulster. His body was found there in a church of his name in 1185 and was transferred to another part of the same church. His Feast Day is fixed for March 17th in the calendar of the saints of the Church.
