Archbishop Spellman, after a short stay, arrived here by special plane Tuesday and was the guest of David Gray, U. S. Minister to Ireland at the American Legation.

LAETARE MEDAL

On Wednesday morning, the Archbishop celebrated Mass at the Pro-Cathedral. Addressing the congregation, he recalled memories inspired by the International Eucharistic Congress in 1933 and expressed his gratitude to God for the present opportunity to visit Ireland and to be thrilled once again by the piety of the Irish people. Following the Mass, the Archbishop walked through the church, greeting his friends on the congregation. Later, from Presbyterian steps, he blessed crowds who gathered in the streets as a gesture of welcome.

SIMPLY, accompanied by Col. A. F. McChrystal, of the American Legion, Archbishop Spellman called upon His Excellency the Most Rev. Patrick Robinson, Papal Nuncio to Ireland. Following this visit, the American prelate went on a tour of Government buildings and was received by J. P. Walsh, Secretary of External Affairs.

The Archbishop and Prime Minister Eamon De Valera were in conference for nearly an hour and a half. He was accompanied by Minister Flanagan and Secretary Walsh on his visit to the Prime Minister.

DR. VALERA'S GUEST

Archbishop Spellman also visited the Most Rev. John McQuaid, Archbishop of Dublin, on Wednesday afternoon. Bringing his best due to a close, he was the guest of Prime Minister De Valera at a dinner that night.

In the company of Archbishop McQuaid, Archbishop Spellman visited St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, where they were welcomed by the Rev. Dr. Edward Kinsane, the President. Archbishop was taken on a tour of the institution's celebrated library, met the professorial staff and addressed the students, paying high tribute to the College's work and its worldwide influence. Archbishop Spellman stressed America's debt to the Irish immigrants who helped to bring the Faith to the United States.

Sunday, Archbishop Spellman celebrated Mass and distributed Holy Communion in St. Peter's Vincentian church, and addressed a large congregation. The Archbishop expressed great happiness in being able to pay this third visit to Ireland and praised the demonstrations of faith he has witnessed. Crowds waited outside the church to greet the Archbishop's arrival and departure.

Archbishop Spellman was the guest at luncheon of the Papal Nuncio, and later called on Douglass Hyde, President of Eliza. He was the guest of Archbishop McQuaid at an informal dinner last evening.

FOLLOWING IN HIS FATHER'S FOOTSTEPS

JOHN M. HEDGES, JR.

WHEN his father was alive, he said many times, "My ambition is to have my son follow in my footsteps." Now the many friends of "Jack" Hedges will rejoice that his son has made that dream come true. Today John M. Hedges, Jr., is a full-fledged licensed undertaker.

Literally, he will carry on the splendid, dignified, friendly traditions that his father practiced for 30 years as a funeral director.

In keeping with progress, new techniques and improved facilities will be constantly adopted. There will be no change in those finer, human characteristics of their sympathetic services. Even the old, well-known, respected name—Hedges and Hoffman—will be retained.

Many friends and patrons will also be delighted to know that James R. McDermott, associated with Hedges and Hoffman for 22 years, will continue to aid John M. Hedges as he did his father.
