Internments Severe Blow To Jesuit China Missions; Canadian Reported Slain

NEW YORK (NC)—Three Canadian Jesuit missionaries, the Revs. Alphonse Dube, Armand Labeyly and Prosper Bernard, were killed at Fungchien in the northwestern part of Kiangsu Province, China, according to advice received by the Jesuit Mission Bureau here. The information added that all Jesuit missionaries in Shanghai, including Americans, were interned at Macau near Shanghai.

This cable received here from Shanghai via Vatican City, represents only a part of the widespread news by the Japanese to mandate the Catholic Mission in Occupied China. The Mission Bureau stated for the Office of War Information it is reported to have picked up a Vatican Radio Broadcast received in Ireland stating that six or seven Netherlands and Belgian Catholic Missionaries and all missionaries of the same nationalities in North China have been interned.

Work at Standstill

This same broadcast stated that all salutarians in Shanghai were interned, which, if unqualified, would mean that at least 200 Sisters, over 100 Priests and about 50 Brothers have been interned and their multiple mission activities are at a standstill. If allowed to work, the 70 Discalced and 50 Jesuit native priests (in or near Shanghai) together with a correspondingly proportionate number of native Sisters and Brothers could not possibly staff in a skeleton manner the dozens of missionary institutions much less minister even to the minimum spiritual needs of the 40,000 Catholics in the city of Shanghai and its environs, the Mission Bureau said.

The internment of the American Jesuits means the collapse of two flourishing high schools in Shanghai and Nanking, a large batch of several thousand Catholics and the complete isolation of the Hsichow and Yen-chow mission districts. No specific word has been received as to the whereabouts of the Rev. Mack Foley and the Rev. Ignatius Gatz, Jesuit missionaries in the Hsichow district, 200 miles west of Nanking.
