Internments Severe Blow To Jesuit China Missions; Canadian Reported Slain

NEW YORK (NC)—Three Canadian Jesuit missionaries, the Revs. Alphonse Dube, Armand Lalonde, and Prosper Bernard, were killed at Fenghsien in the northwestern part of Kiangsu Province, China, according to advices received by the Jesuit Mission Bureau here. The information added that all Jesuit missionaries in Shanghai, including 22 Americans, were interned at Zikawei near Shanghai. This cable received here from Shanghai via Vatican City represents only a part of the widespread move by the Japanese to liquidate the Catholic Missions in Occupied China, the Mission Bureau stated for the Office of War Information is reported to have picked up a Vatican Radio broadcast beamed to Ireland stating that six or seven Netherlands and Belgian Catholic Missionary Bishops and all missionaries of the same nationalities in North-China have been interned. Work at Standstill. This same broadcast stated that all missionaries in Shanghai were interned, which, if unqualified, would mean that at least 200 Sisters, over 100 Priests and about 60 Brothers have been interned and their multiple mission activities are at a standstill. If allowed to work, the 70 dioceses and 40 Jesuit native priests (in or near Shanghai) together with a corresponding proportionate number of native Sisters and Brothers could not possibly staff in a skeleton manner the dozens of missionary institutions much less minister even to the minimum spiritual needs of the 60,000 Catholics in the city of Shanghai and its environs, the Mission Bureau said. The internment of the American Jesuits means the collapse of two flourishing high schools in Shanghai and Nanking, a large parish of several thousand Catholics and the complete isolation of the Hsichow and Yangchow mission districts. No specific word has been received as to the whereabouts of the Rev. Mark Falvey and the Rev. Ignatius Galt Jesuit missionaries in the Hsichow district, 200
