NCCS Trustees Laud Success Of F. P. Matthews In Britain

WASHINGTON (NC)—Lauding his successful accomplishment of a "very difficult mission" undertaken at its request and under its direction, the Board of Trustees of the National Catholic Community Service has adopted a resolution extending its thanks to Francis P. Matthews of Ossage, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the NCCS.

The Board spoke with reference to Mr. Matthews' recently-completed 12-week tour to survey the moral and social conditions surrounding the servicemen of the United States in England, Ireland and Scotland. Noting specifically that Mr. Matthews is Supreme Knight of the Knights of Columbus, the Board of Trustees stated that, in his able handling of the mission it had entrusted to him, Mr. Matthews has reflected much credit upon the organization of which he is the head.

The NCCS Board of Trustees is composed of the Archbishops and Bishops who constitute the Administrative Board of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Mr. Matthews reviewed for the Board of Trustees the places he went as representative of the NCCS, told of his visits to camps of the American forces, and reported on the moral and social conditions surrounding them.

The American Red Cross, Mr. Matthews told the Board, is doing a splendid job in the field in which it is serving. It has a large program under way and will very substantially supply the material needs of the men and women with the armed forces in the way of recreation, entertainment, housing and food, he said. Mr. Matthews reported that he found a great need for the work which the NCCS is so splendidly equipped to do, and also that there is a great desire for this sort of service on the part of the men in the armed forces.

Mr. Matthews pointed out that the other armed services in England—British troops and Canadian troops—are the beneficiaries of the services of civilian agencies with a definite religious background and program, and that the United States troops in these areas would profit from these services.

Denies State Aid To Religious Schools

Attorney General Goldstein pointed out that "no public money may be used as aid or maintenance, directly or indirectly, of any religious instruction." He said it was apparent that "a point may be reached where any conceivable benefit to the religious instruction from a service which is designed primarily to serve a wartime emergency becomes too remote to invade the constitutional prohibition."

As an example, he said, in a portion of a building, used one day a week for Sunday school, or incidental religious instruction, which is not its principal function, "a child care project could properly be conducted in that building" by a school board, social welfare agency or private agency.

Mr. Goldstein said there was no question of the State's right to provide funds for health and welfare services for all children, but when the funds granted are used in a manner directly or indirectly to aid any religious institution or school under the direction or control of a religious denomination, then the grant would be in violation of the Constitution.

Prayer Inscribed On Plane Brings Bomber Crew Through Safely, They Firmly Believe

By LIEUT. DONALD T. SHEEHAN, A.C.

SOMEWHERE IN NORTH AFRICA—Among the combat crew of a certain bomber in the North African theater, atheists are as rare as they were in the famed fox-holes of Bataan.

In fact, the six men are such ardent believers in the power of a little prayer, mysteriously inscribed on their ship months ago, they dread the day when the ravages of war and weather will have wiped it out.

The prayer, written by an unidentified private at a hangar in the States, asks that:

"God bless the crew of this plane. I will say a prayer for your safe return."

Excepting the private's grade the author's signature is indistinguishable. The boys wish they knew the name of their well-wisher. For since the day that simple act of faith and hope was inscribed, neither heavy flak nor intense enemy fire has kept them from returning safely from 19 death-defying missions over enemy territory.

Divine Intervention?

Do they attribute their success to Divine Intervention?

Well, they don't exactly call it that, but as the pilot, Capt. William K. Pritchard, of Mobile, puts it:

"There have been all too many times when some thing above and beyond our armored protection and skill has pulled us through. A lot of our buddies in the squadron used to rib us and say it was 'luck.' After our last mission they changed their tone."

"We think there's something to that little prayer," the Captain reverently adds. "After all, if it was just luck, the old law of averages would have ruled us out long ago."

Substantiating the latter observation, Captain Pritchard recalls that not a man has ever been wounded although the ship, called the "Coughlin's Coffin" because of its checkered history in the States, has barely made home on several occasions.

Take that last sortie, for instance, when a piece of flak, seeking a soft spot, penetrated the nose section of the engine. Instantly the boys sensed that Jerry had hit them in a vulnerable place. They harbored some doubts about their ability to return in one piece.

And with considerable justification, too, for later examination revealed a neat hole an inch in diameter.

Neither crew nor mechanics, nor anyone else who has seen the flit, can offer an acceptable answer for their safe delivery—other, than perhaps the prayer.

Struck In Other Places

That piece of flak, which attained its desired objective in the engine, wasn't the only piece which reached home that day. Lt. Paul N. Gregory, Brownwood, Tex., serving as combined navigator-bombardier, is thanking the Power behind that supplication that he wasn't peering down the drift-netter, the moment another piece went up the instrument. These navigational aids have a two-inch diameter.

Tail-gunner S/Sgt. Emlyn H. Mitchell, Obispo, Pa., is proud to fight another day in spite of the fact that two well-directed shots pierced his rear "perch," a fact apart in front and back of him. Another just missed his pal, S/Sgt. Herbert A. Bolin, turret-gunner, and falling short there, went on to graze the ship's control cables.

As if the enemy were aware of an invisible "something" which guides the bomber, another piece struck viciously an inch below the prayer itself. It bounced off, leaving only a paint-scratch.
