Diocesan Camp To Hold 6 Weeks' Encampment For Boys, 2 For Girls

Camp Stella Maris, the diocesan camp, will open Sunday, June 27. The camp this year will operate six weeks for boys and two weeks for girls.

Due to war-time stress, travel inconvenience and working parents, this year is expected to be an extremely heavy camp year. Camp Stella Maris is now cultivating two acres of property purchased last year, so that fresh vegetables can be raised for the campers.

Dates for the boys' encampment this year are as follows: June 27 to July 3; July 4 to July 10; July 11 to July 24; July 25 to August 7. Girls' encampment will begin August 8 and close August 14. Seminarians from St. Andrew's and St. Bernard's Seminaries will serve as counselors for the boys, while young women, especially trained in youth work, will serve as girl counselors.

Camp Stella Maris occupies twenty acres along the eastern shore of Conesus Lake. Property includes a large administration building, four sleeping cabins, club shop and store, the Judge Cabral picnic home, two barns and a caretaker's house. American Red Cross waterfront is divided into areas for non-swimmers, beginners and advanced swimmers.

Registrations for Stella Maris are now being taken at the Camp Office, in the Columbus Civic Center, 20 Chestnut Street, Rochester. Detailed information may be obtained by writing or calling the Camp Secretary in the Columbus Civic Center at 422-1027.

Evelyn Dolis, May Queen of 1942, removed the crown from her own head and placed it upon Josephine Alessi, the Queen for 1943. Mary Lombardo and Mary Zafuto were chosen as the Queen's attendants. After receiving the crown Josephine placed it at the feet of Our Lady.

H.R.A.A. Honors 55 Members In Service

With three of them present in person, the 55 members of Holy Redeemer Athletic Association in the Armed Forces were honored at the 27th Annual banquet, Wednesday evening, May 19, in the club-rooms, Clifford Ave. at Hudson.

Club members attending the banquet who are in service were Staff Sergeant Robert Kerry, Pfc Edward Kasner and Pvt. Ken Scholl. A weekly news-letter sent by the club to the members in service was distributed to those at the banquet.

That work, loyalty and cooperation had built up the Holy Redeemer Athletic Association was voiced by the Rev. William W. Heisel, pastor of Holy Family Church and founder of the Association. Father Heisel recalled the 55 members who had served in World War I and paid his tribute to the 55 in the present war.

Presentation of a gift from the club to the Rev. F. William Stauder, pastor and club moderator, was made by John W. Mattie, toastmaster. Father Stauder lauded the club for its cooperation with the pastor especially during the Diamond Jubilee Celebration.

Father Stauder announced a gift of $10 from the women's bowling team, second in city tournament, to be used for the boys in the service.

Guests included the Rev. Adalbert Schneider, the Rev. Walter Carson, the Rev. William J. Schirfelli, Thomas H. O'Connor and Fred Schmidt.

also received $10.85 in cash for this worthy cause.

Members of Our Lady's Sodality have volunteered to spread the practice of the family Rosary during May. Each member chooses a certain day on which her family says the Rosary. This project is working very successfully.

The Visitation Committee has a very clever plan. A Spiritual Bank has been formed in which each committee member holds an account. Bank books are distributed in which Sodality members keep a record of their deposits. When a member of the parish is ill, the treasurer draws from these accounts a sufficient number of prayers for a spiritual bouquet. At Easter time, the bank became rather low in funds. At present, Holy Ghost Sodality are trying to build it to its former capacity.

BLACK WINDOWS

By ESTHER H. DOOLITTLE

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West 41th St., New York City. These articles are appearing weekly in our columns.

Peter, aged three and a half, came screaming into the dining room where Mother was lighting the candles for supper. "Peter! Whatever is the matter?" The child pointed to the living room where he had been for some time examining the building he'dges with his blocks.

"In there? A thing, looking in the window?" he sobbed. Mother took him by the hand.

"Let's go see, shall we?" The shades were up and all the windows in the bright room showed only the darkness of the shutters outside with the exception of one. In that was reflected the back of an old wing chair that had a white embroidered headrest fastened on it. Peter pointed to it and hid against Mother.

"It's a face! Looking in at me!" he whispered.

"Why Peter! It's only the old chair!" Mother laughed. "How funny! See! She moved the chair away so that it was not reflected; then back again."

"It's just like a mirror because the glass is black, you see. Come closer, now. There's Mother and there's Peter!" Soon Peter joined in her laughter, but for several nights he spoke about the reflection and could be seen to glance apprehensively, with a catch in his breath, at all the black windows.

Night after night Mother and Daddy stood with him by first one and then another of the living room windows, moved the chair from one to another, and laughed at their own reflections in the glass. Gradually the child's uneasiness wore away, but not before Mother had fathomed the cause of the sudden fear.

What could have happened? At first there seemed no solution to the puzzle. Conditions were certainly no different from what they had been. Every night the shades had been up and the windows black, for the dark green outside shutters had always been closed before the lights were turned on. She thought back carefully, going step by step, over all that had occurred that day and evening, that seemed in any way connected with no results. At last, however, she reached in her mind the hours immediately preceding Peter's first exhibition of the new fear.

Could it have been caused by her own little scare—when she had almost forgotten—just before supper? She had hurried into the dining room to set the table. There the lights had not yet been turned on nor the shutters closed. She had casually glanced out of the window toward the west. A vivid line of red was streaking up through the bare trees in the twilight. She had rushed to the window in alarm, calling Peter's father excitedly.

"George! George! Come quickly! There's a fire! Look! Do you suppose it's sabotage?" George had come running and then both had laughed when they realized that it was only the sun going to bed! But Peter? He hadn't laughed, she remembered, as she recalled the scene. He had stood on the threshold of the room, watching her with wide, startled eyes. She was sure, now, that then and there, the fear that had associated itself with black windows had been born.

To Peter, sensitive, quick and observant, seeing his mother frightened and excited had been a menacing experience, far more potent and lasting in its effect than anything that could be accomplished by any word pictures concerning the foolishness of fear. To him it had been an experience the effect of which only careful reasoning and counter-suggestion could eradicate. To his excited mother it had been a lesson, since she desired above all things to have a wholesome, well-balanced child. She realized now that whatever might happen in her little circle, in this war-torn world, she must moment by moment protect her child through constant, watchful self-control.
