Avers America Faces Its Most Critical Hour

NEW YORK (N.Y.)—America faces its most critical hour, not in winning the war, but in saving the peace, the Rev. John P. Crean, S.J., of the Catholic University of America, declared in an address delivered over the "Catholic News" radio program on Sunday evening.

"It is good to be able to say that Americans will refuse nothing when the welfare of the nation is at stake," Fr. Crean said. "If ever we have failed, then it is because we did not say enough. We say that we want peace now. We may not have realized what our country demands of us. Had we known it, we would have done it. Without our nation's help, we can do nothing."

"There are deep divisions in America which would lead to disaster if not checked. Men in this war, we are painfully aware of the struggle between capital and labor, between city and country, of north and south. These have been the chief causes of our divisions. During the war these have been quieted, but they have not disappeared. It was the same during the depression. Then the farmers were told that their lands were being taken away, but they were told to grow more food. Then they were told to produce more to show that more could be done. In the same way, during the depression, the workers were told that they were being exploited, but they were told to work harder. Then they were told to buy more, but they were told to save more. Then they were told that they could prove the cost and energy to win the future would bring them victory. They painted wild pictures of our future, obviously overlooking the waste of silver living. Then they would invite the farmer to seek better opportunities. They claimed that he should be exempt from the tax on income against inflation. As a result, manipulated food costs for a time increased the economic situation of the nation. Here are the seeds of a dangerous class struggle."

Unity Needed
Today, then, and tomorrow we need an even greater participation than we have shown in the days of war. We need unity to face the difficult social and economic problems which our nation must solve. Labor, capital, farm, and city must work together for the survival of a free America. Manufacturing and agriculture will not accomplish this task; they will only declare that only in a democracy can labor, business, and government prosper. Mr. Harry Francis J. Haas, Chairman of the Presidential Committee on Employment Practice, writing in the August issue of the AMERICAN INDUSTRIALIST, urges Americans to put aside all racial and religious distinctions.

Discussing labor's responsibility in promoting democratic values, both now and in the years to come, Mr. Haas observed that neighborhood and goodwill toward minority group workers will strengthen the labor movement.

"Take the Negro for example," he writes. "The colored Negroes in America are substantially all wage-workers. If only one out of the country they are the backbone of the labor market. Therefore, if any workers are to prosper and secure, they must be certain that Negro workers are equally poor, poor and secure as the rest. He is invited for work will try to earn the income of food, shelter and raiment; even if he is forced to do so outside the framework of labor unions, or even against labor unions."

The wartime job employment policy of the nation, Minister Haas writes, is in many ways a continuation of our historic policy of protecting the work in the interest of the public welfare, as well as women and children. Workers and injured workers must be helped to reconstruct their lives in communities, just as our minority group workers return to civilian life. The Negroes have historically suffered from employment because of their race, color and religion.
