A Passing Parade

By all means, let us try to devise new ways of expressing old truths. Meanwhile, however, let us not forget that we are addressing not a grandstand but a passing parade. What may sometimes seem to us to be obvious and trite will be for many people, as it was for the first Apostles, a new and great talking experience.—The Magnificat.

'Lift Me Up, I Want To See God'

The mother brought her little man child to see in the Parish Church what all the children were talking about — the Baby Jesus that lay under the big star, and the carols and the kings that came yesterday to the stable where His birthday was.

And the little boy watched the vigil lights and the big, big lamps and the people shining in the colored windows and his eyes came wonderingly back to his mother's face.

"Mama, what are you looking at?" She knelt so quiet, so intense she hardly heard him. The voice insisted. More to herself than to him she answered, "God, Jesus, little son."

Then he remembered the talk of the children and tip toe he stretched himself up to see God. But all he could see was the straw and the sheep and a donkey's head.

"Mama, lift me up, lift me up, I want to see God."

And like every good woman in the world she lifted up the man child away up above the level of the beasts, away up till he could almost touch the star and there he saw behind the animals the wonder that is Christ Our Lord.

The genius of religion is to lift men up above the obvious animalism of life and enable us to see behind human beastliness the godlikeness of every man.

'I Can't See Him'

How often we say to a person, "I can't see him." That is literally often true from where we stand, we hardly ever see God or goodness in life. The dumb and dirty ox, the reactionary donkey, the allthery undependable sheep, that animalism of man we see obviously. Indeed too often it is on our own level. But from the height of Christ we can see the truth that man, every man, is better, nobler, truer than he seems, that the meanest man is worth the love of God.—The Labor Leader.

Traffic Cop Irish

A young Belfast lady was driving in her new car along Dublin's Merrion Road when something went wrong with the engine. The traffic light changed from green to red and back again to green, and still the car would not budge. A Guard came up: "What's the matter, miss?" he inquired. "Haven't we got the colour you like?"—Father Mathew Record.
