Everything Seems 'Petty' Now to Former Aquinas Student Fighting Japs

After battling Japs in hand-to-hand combat on Leyte, everything he ever complained about "seems so small now" to Sgt. Bernard J. "Bump" Coyne, former student of Aquinas Institute.

In a letter to Edward Geier, Sunset Street, Sgt. Coyne expresses thanks for prayers, "without which we would never have made it," and explains, "in case you wonder what I am talking about, it's the fight here on Leyte, especially Ormoc."

"I really had some pretty close ones this time," the former Aquinas student reveals. "I had a Nip charge at me with a rifle with one of those long bayonets on it. I got that one. I also had my canteen shot off my right hip and burn my leg. The third one caved in my helmet and knocked me cold. This one put me in cold storage for a week but I am back and O. K. now . . . You see what I mean when I say that everything seems so petty . . ."

Christmas Mass this year took on a new values for the men who faced death on Leyte, according to the Rochester soldier. "I don't think I've ever seen a better Mass," he writes. "even in the best church back home. We had a jeep for an altar, the sky for a roof and the ground for our bench. The sun was very hot and the palms were waving in a small breeze. It was the most simple yet sincere Mass I've attended.

"Some 200 G. I.'s," continues Sgt. Coyne's description of Christmas on Leyte, "with a weary battle look in their eyes and long heavy beards received Holy Communion. We received in Thanksgiving for having survived another campaign and also in remembrance of those of our boys who won't be back. Everything I ever complained about seems so small now."

Sgt. Coyne expresses the hope that "our part here this ended . . . God, how I pray it's ended! Please don't let anyone back home complain," he concludes.
