We Are 'Church Of the Unwashed'

Yes, we are the Church of the unwashed, of the poor, of the ignorant, of the illiterate. Our churches are in the shacks. In fact, our churches are everywhere, and if we are the Church of the unfortunate, it is because we are the Catholic Church, the Church of the crushed, ten of the rich, of the wide, and of the healthy.

In fact, we have every class of people in our pews, excepting none. Our Church can't stand them. And isn't it wonderful that things are that way? — that the shoulder, say, passing the church on his way home from a night shift, can drop in for an early Mass dressed as he is, to clatter with his safety-line in a fervent genuflection and adore his God in greasy dungarees? If he happens to slide into the same pew with some fatidical matron, she may pull her purse from under his gloves and touch her elbow tactfully from the proximity of his flannel shirt, but she doesn't intend to make him less welcome, and he certainly never feels that way.

You don't often see pictures of people in silk hats and cutaway coats, posed on the steps of Catholic Churches. Nor that we don't have such people. We can tap that. The Almanac de Gotha is filled with the names of Catholic families who were living in palaces when the ancestors of many present-day nobles were still bedding their castle in their parlors.

No, the Catholic Church is a stronghold of the people — a good cross-section of society, taking in every class. Our clergy come from plain families, for the most part. Mitzie and red-hair are assigned, not so much as dignity, but rather as responsibility, given to those with plenty and talent, rather than to those of family and position.

Books find it hard to be done, because humility is the first requirement to getting God's help. It comes to those who are on their knees, close to the floor. As long as a man thinks that a clean shirt, shining shoes, and a trimmed scalp are the necessary accompaniments of virtue, or that a man's worth is proportional to his money, he isn't going by Catholic standards, for we Catholics can't be made as long as we follow a Carpenter born in a stable.

The Cow That Kicked

As a husband, Jim was pretty much of a weako. Marie had known he took a drink or two when she married him, but she had never thought he would let it get the better of him. And there they were, eight years married, with three of the greatest "kids" you could imagine, and Jim coming home half from the office every night, not drunk, spined up, but with just enough liquor in him to make him ugly. More often had he picked a fight, pushed his chair away from the table, and then started out the door over someone he didn't like. It used to be that he'd come in, stink, but now it was just a stink every time.

To those who are watching heaven, this must be very heavy stuff. But when you think what a difference it makes when you're not drinking, you begin to understand.

Jim and Marie had a good life and they liked it very much.

A lot of trouble was set loose in this world when Adam sinned against God. We Catholics believe that man was created perfect, with every characteristic and trait in accordance with God's will.

Adam sinned, however, and that sin was passed down through all the generations of man.

It is this sin that has caused all the trouble in the world.

Protest Anti-Religious Humiliation by Teacher

MEXICO CITY (NC) — The National Union of Parents has protested to the Minister of Public Education that the director of Daniel Delgadillo School here deprived three pupils of religious medals and another one of a crucifix which had been given him as a waste-basket. When the pupil recovered the crucifix, the director snatched it from the boy's hands and burned it.

The director of the school then drew a grotesque figure on the blackboard, it is charged, and forced the pupil to kneel before it and pray for the restoration of the charred crucifix. After this "anti-religious humiliation" of the boy, the complaint said, the director attempted by means of an explanation of the text of Article A, the "secular education" clause of the Federal Constitution — to induce the boy to withdraw his complaint for the Catholic re-

Near East Missions

Meet Rev. Francis J. Goddard, S.S., President
Rev. Thomas J. McMillan, S.T.B., National Secretary
Rev. Andrew M. Regan, S.T.L., Assistant Secretary

"Come, Follow Me!"

We congratulate Monsignor McDonnell and Father O'Donnell, of the National Office of the Propagation, for their part in making March "National Vocation Month." Please help us in our efforts to recruit young men for the priesthood by sending a dollar to Near East Missions.

MAGIC CARPET, WELCOME VISITOR

We were just wondering about English College, Irie, when like the wise oldish Father Mathew, S.J., one of its professors, after years there, he has returned for a brief visit.

Father brought real and good news. Father Bertrand, the rector, and his fellow American Jesuits from Boston are well and hard at work. The school has grown from 100 students in 1958 to 340 in 1963. Two hundred and sixteen are Jesuit boys. Among the others are 82 Americans. This is something, however, when the Fathers over there, the students Indian, outnumber them roughly.

Father's present problem is to get us new buildings, for every bit of space is taken up. Come, to help us, are the times when they build houses, and the schools, and the dormitories, and the libraries, and the new ones, too. This month, as a service, we want to send him over to Puerto Rico. Won't you be a partner with us in helping these good American priests?

WHO WILL?

Who will build a school for Negro children of Puerto Rico? A school for Negro children of Puerto Rico? Who will help us to build a school for Negro children of Puerto Rico?

It is this kind of school that we want to build for Negro children of Puerto Rico.
