

Austria Rejects Reds, Backs Catholic Party

Washington—(NC)—The Austrian People's Party, which represents the Catholic population of Austria and its will for independence and freedom, has won a small but clear majority in the elections of a National Assembly.

According to final returns, the 165 seats in the new Austrian parliament will be distributed as follows: Austrian People's Party: 85 seats (1,574,567 votes); Socialist Party: 76 seats (1,426,862 votes); Communist Party: 6 seats (175,671 votes).

Elections for the nine provincial parliaments were held at the same time, and since these diets name the members of the Austrian Senate, the upper chamber of the country's parliament will also have a Catholic majority.

Leopold Figl, director of the Catholic Farmer's League until 1938 and a bitter enemy of the Nazis who kept him in concentration camps for several years, will head a new coalition government.

Through various European comments runs an undertone of disappointment that the Austrian elections did not show a more definite swing to the Left. In this respect, it is pointed out by persons here familiar with the Austrian situation, it should be remembered that the Austrian People's Party is not a party of the Right, but, as its name indicates, truly a people's party.

The People's Party won its victory after a hard campaign, complicated by the fact that Austria is still rigidly divided into four zones according to the occupation of the country by Russian, American, British and French forces. Mail services between the four zones, and communications, are almost nonexistent.

At least 300,000 Austrians are still away from their home country. They were either pressed into the German armies and are now prisoners of war, most of them in Soviet Russia, or are still living in Germany as displaced persons.

Reports from Austria state that Socialists and Communists sought, under many pretexts, to prevent Catholics from freely exercising their right to vote. There are also many indications that some of the occupation au-

British Prelate Sees Lack Of Freedom in Many Nations

London—(NC)—Final peace in Europe and the world must be achieved by "a more Catholic, that is, an international spirit of love," Archbishop Bertrand, Cardinal of Westminster, told a meeting here of the Council of the World Organization. He held "moral" education was imperative for world salvation.

Archbishop Bertrand said: "The world is still divided into two great camps, the East and the West, and the sword of the Spirit, that is, the Word of God."

Describing a system of "parallel bonds," the Archbishop declared. "Thousands of people," he said, "are still being persecuted for their religious beliefs. Hundreds of thousands are in concentration camps. In many countries the world today continue their bloody work."

"If we fail to have final peace in Europe and in the world, we shall have another cause of war," he said. "The world is still divided into two great camps, the East and the West, and the sword of the Spirit, that is, the Word of God."
