Before Death Claimed New U. S. Cardinal

In one of the last pictures taken before his death in his native Ireland, March 9, His Eminence John Cardinal Glennon, Archbishop of St. Louis is shown in his first official act as a Cardinal. The 83-year-old Prince of the Church, America's oldest member of the hierarchy, was photographed as he signed the register taking possession of his titular church, the Basilica of San Clemente in Rome, on February 28. Pictured with him, left to right: Magr. John P. Cody, Chancellor, St. Louis; Bishop James A. Griffin, Springfield, Ill.; Cardinal Glennon. Second row: Auxiliary Bishop William D. O'Brien, Chicago; Bishop Michael J. Ready, Columbus; Rev. Philip F. O'Connor, St. Louis, the Cardinal's nephew. In the rear are Bishop William T. McCarty, C.S.S.R., Military Delegate, and Bishop Stanislaus J. Muench, Fargo, N. D. (Ne Photos)

Plane Flies Cardinal's Body Home

Between All Hallows and Mullingar, there was a brief stop of the funeral procession at Kinnegad, where the Cardinal had received the Sacrament of Baptism and where he spent his boyhood days.

Three of those who had been elevated to the Cardinalate at the Consistory just held in Rome were present at the Mass in Mullingar this morning. They were Their Eminences James Cardinal McGulgan, Archbishop of Toronto; Norman Cardinal Gilroy, Archbishop of Sydney, and Bernard Cardinal Griffin, Archbishop of Westminster. The Cardinals are the guests of President Sean T. O'Kelly during their stay here. They were brought from England in a special plane provided by the Government of Eire.

Messages of sympathy have poured in from all quarters to the President's house in Phoenix Park, here, where Cardinal Glennon died. Among the first personal callers were Archbishop McQuaid, Monsignor Gino Parl, representing Archbishop Paschal Robinson, the Papal Nuncio; Premier De Valera, and David Gray, United States Minister to Eire. Relatives Call.

Mrs. Bridget O'Connor, Mrs. Mary Hughes and Mrs. Elizabeth Connolly, all of County West Meath, sisters of the late Cardinal visited him the evening before his death. Other relatives who called at that time were Mary Doyle and Sister Loyola, nieces of the Cardinal Archbishop, and the Revs. John O'Connor, bleeding because they are unable to give the barest necessities to their children—they are not responsible for the war, for they, themselves, have had to suffer all these years.

"If one wants to burden," Father Pfyffer continued, "the whole German nation with a collective responsibility, condemning all men, women, old people and children to slow starvation and death, then this crime is equal to the ones committed by the former Nazi leaders against subjugated peoples.

"Never was a true peace obtained for humanity," he emphasized.

William Doyle and Thomas O'Connor, nephews, and Mrs. Matthew Glennon, a sister-in-law. The Cardinal appeared to recognize them, it was said.

Cardinal Glennon died on a site close-by the scene of Ireland's International Eucharistic Congress of a decade and a half ago, when half a million people were held spellbound by the Archbishop of St. Louis, who was one of the outstanding speakers at that great public demonstration of faith. The house where His Eminence died was the seat of the Lords Lieutenant of Ireland under the British regime, and only now is being occupied by a Catholic President of Ireland for the first time. Papal flags are among the colors flying at half-staff there today.

The late Archbishop of St. Louis was a model patient, according to Sister Mary Ross, one of the two Bon Secours nuns who nursed him in his final illness. He seemed to have a premonition that he would not survive, for he remarked to his nurses one day: "In a week from now our little party will be broken up never to meet again."

One of the nurses asked him jokingly if, failing to regain his strength, he would remain in Ireland. She pointed out that Eire has no Cardinal at the present time and would certainly be very happy to keep him. The Cardinal, although suffering partial mental confusion at the time, firmly replied: "I do not belong to Ireland or to Kinnegad, but to America and I am going back there."

Following his death, Cardinal Glennon was first laid out in a room just to the left of the main entrance to the President's house. Pale blue and gold with deep rose decorations furnish the color scheme of this room. Just above the Cardinal's head, as his body lay in state, was a picture of Mary, Queen of Ireland. On the opposite wall, over a mantle piece, was a painting of Saint Brigid. On draperies, at the right of the black and white-draped catafalque, hung a framed picture of the Cardinal's Red Hat, with his crest.

Impressive scenes marked the first part of Cardinal Glennon's obsequies, when the State rendered him the highest honor. Sunday evening, the Cardinal's body was carried in a solemn procession house and proceeded at funeral pace from Phoenix Park to All Hallows College, taking 90 minutes to cover a distance of about three miles.

One hundred and sixty students lined up at the gate of All Hallows College as the hearse drawn by four horses bearing white plumes approached.
