their Mother, the Church. They have made all sorts of easy compromises with flesh and with fidelity."

Basis of this compromising weakness of society is the denial of a divinity beyond humanity and of any law beyond human law, the outgrowth of pragmatism, he explained.

Referring to the country's jurists who accept the pragmatic doctrine which denies Duties and Rights, the former lawyer queried: "Are they unwilling that the structure of government must collapse with the removal of its foundation?"

Emphasizing the imminent dangers of pragmatism, he continued: "This terrible doctrine is poisoning the wells of jurisprudence. It is a psychological warfare on the side of anarchy."

"For if I say that I have a right to do what I wish without considering the rights of others, including those of God, then I should admit that I am no longer speaking of right and that I have begun to speak of might."

Condemning the use of war as an instrument of human justice, Father Fidèle declared: "Throughout human history devils and armies have been the last resort of nations in determining their rights. The private bully, the national pressure group and the international diplomatic and war machines have been the deciding judges in the arbitration of human blood."

The men who assume the responsibility of administering justice, the Bishop explained, can do nothing better than ask God's assistance.
