Mission's 50 Year Progress Hailed by King in Uganda

Fifty years ago the first Catholic missionary arrived in Toro, Uganda. The Protestant minister, who had preceded him there, turned the king against the new arrival, Father Achie, White Father. However, His Majesty told the priest "You may teach your religion to the poor and the wretched; as for us, the rich and the great, we have our religion."

Father Achie accepted the challenge and, at his death, nine years later, he had the consolation of knowing that the village numbered hundreds of converts with many under instruction.

At present, after fifty years Toro mission, known as Our Lady of the Snows (so called because of the snow capped mountains of Rwenzori nearby) has a beautiful church in which 5,000 of its parishioners can find place; a large school for boys where natives, who have received a diploma, teach; a high school staffed by Brothers of the Christian Schools. On the other side of the church a community of seven White Sisters are in charge of the girls' schools, as well as a normal school. They also operate a workroom, hospital, dispensary and a novitiate for native sisters. A group of these latter help the White Sisters in their schools, hospitals and dispensaries.

Fifty years ago the mission had but one Catholic; today there are 24,000. Then there was but one missionary; today there are four White Fathers, and three White Brothers. The native king deposed the first missionary and his religion. His son, the present king, though a Protestant, assisted with the queen at the Golden Jubilee Pontifical Mass.

After the religious ceremonies a commemorative monument, erected in front of the Fathers' house, was unveiled, and the king, in the presence of a vast multitude and many missionaries from neighboring stations, thanked Bishop Lacouriere for the remarkable work of the mission in his country.
