Penfield Church Restored After Fire, Reopened

After eight months of labor, 30-year-old St. Joseph's Church has been completely renovated and restored to Penfield parishioners following the fire which destroyed the altar, roof and vestry last March.

Rev. Jacob R. Rauber, administrator of St. Joseph's, is credited with supplying the initiative and stamina which pushed the project through as well as kept the parish intact during the long months of restoration.

Father Rauber moved his parish to Penfield Town Hall where for the past months he has held Sunday Mass regularly at 8 and 10:30 a. m.

Actual additions to the improved church include a new vestry in the right rear corner, a new side entrance for motor-vehicle parishioners, and three new lantern lights in the center of the ceiling.

Gifts of Parishioners

New statues, crosses, tabernacle and other ecclesiastical items have been donated to the parish by church members. A good share of the expense was met by proceeds from the annual St. Joseph Festival in which members of all sects cooperated with Catholic laymen to insure success.

The whole exterior of the structure has been painted white from the foundation to the spire and a soft plush rug covers the floor along the aisle and under the altar. Fresh, light green finish has been given the pews. The stained-glass windows in the new walls have been repaired and the stations of the cross repainted.

The tall, freshly-painted doors leading from the vestibule to the interior are now hung to swing outward for greater safety in an emergency.

Thank Mass Possible

A newly constructed balcony houses the choir loft and the overflow crowds now attending the two Sunday Masses. It is expected that another Mass will be added to the schedule if attendance continues increasing.

Minor repairs were effected to the old stone steps leading to the church and a new mat has been laid.

Parishioners of St. Joseph's have expressed their gratitude to Father Rauber for his guidance and material assistance as well as to other individuals who made outstanding contributions to the work.

Everyone who in any way helped has been given a vote of thanks from Chief Leonard Bach and the Penfield Fire Department to Joseph Kuhn and the Holy Name Society.

COMMEND LONG SERVICE

The 24th anniversary of the death of Miss Mary Fitzsimmons, Intake Secretary of Rochester Catholic Charities, Family and Child Care Division, is observed at her desk on the eve of her retirement brought commendation from the Rev. Gerald C. Lambert, (left) diocesan Charities director, and Miss Katherine O'Neil, executive director, Family and Child Care Division.

Charities Aid 25 Years Honored On Retirement

Retirement of Miss Mary Fitzsimmons, Intake Secretary of Rochester Catholic Charities, Family and Child Care Division for nearly 25 years, was celebrated yesterday.

His Excellency, Bishop Kearney will be host to a gathering Saturday, Jan. 4, at the Rochester Club when fellow workers of Miss Fitzsimmons will gather to congratulate her upon completion of her service to the Diocese of Rochester.

Rev. Gerald C. Lambert, Diocesan Director of Catholic Charities, and the Rev. Arthur E. Patton, Diocesan Director of the Family and Child Care Agency, will also honor the retiring secretary.

Director's Tribute

In a public statement Father Lambert declared:

"It is difficult to pay fitting tribute to one who has spent a quarter of a century in the faithful service of Christ's poor and distressed. Any words of mine would fall far short of the esteem which we of the Rochester Catholic Charities have for the devotion to duty, the sympathetic understanding and the willing assistance which characterized the labors of Miss Fitzsimmons."

"We merely note the fact of her generous contribution to the cause of Catholic Charity and confidently await the greater recognition and the ample reward of Him who said, 'As long as you did it to one of these, my least brethren, you did it unto Me.'"

The Board and Staff of the Rochester Catholic Charities will miss the kindly presence of Miss Fitzsimmons and wishes to express the hope that God will bless and lengthen the days of her life."

Miss Fitzsimmons entered the field of Catholic Charities on June 1, 1922. During the quarter-century of her service she has met and helped more than 40,000 fellow Catholics. She has aided in solving a variety of problems arising from the impact of two World Wars and a depression on the Christian home.

Assisted Thousands
She was instrumental in welcoming to the community thousands of Catholic immigrants by helping them to become affiliated with local parishes. For a number of years also, parishes from State Correctional Institutions began their readjustment to life under her direction. Homeless transients are among those whom she befriended.

Her job of Intake Secretary, according to Father Patton, is a key one in the Social Agency for it is the Intake Secretary who first meets the person in need who is seeking help.

"Since a person's problem may vary from financial need to family struggle," states the priest, "the sympathetic kindness and the charitable tact of the Intake Secretary is most necessary to overcome the fear and bewilderment of the person in need."

The Catholic Social Agency was set up to supplement the work of the Catholic parish in an urban community. In this task, Miss Fitzsimmons has been main point of contact between the Agency and the Pastor either helping directly or referring the Catholic in need to the proper public agency for help.

Miss Fitzsimmons, who resides at 247 Meigs St., is a member of Blessed Sacrament parish.

$225,000 Fund Drive Slated in Ithaca for New Parochial School

Ithaca—A $225,000 campaign for materials to rebuild fire-damaged Immaculate Conception School here will be conducted in the parish Jan. 20 to 30.

GENEVANS GIVE 6,000 ARTICLES OF CLOTHING

Geneva—Christmas may come a little late for them, but it will be a happy day when four tons of clothing contributed by St. Francis de Sales and St. Stephen's parishes is presented to the needy of Europe.

A final check on the recent "Clothe the War-Stricken" campaign conducted by the two churches in connection with the national and diocesan campaigns for the same purpose indicates that it was highly successful.

One hundred fifty cartons were packed and 6,000 articles of clothing were contained in the one-week intensive campaign conducted by the churches.

The statement said that payments to the school fund may extend over the period of a year. "As a consequence," it continued, "deductions may be made from income taxes for 1947 and 1948 as well as 1946. To take advantage of the concession for this year, donations should be in before Jan. 1."

The pastor's statement continued: "Donations have already been received in memory of deceased members of different families. This is a very laudable thought—one which will appeal to many members of the congregation. We suggest that it is possible to donate a classroom in the school for the same purpose. Those who would be interested in such a contribution are asked to consult with us."

"Responses received both personally and through the mail indicate that the people very generally recognize the importance and the magnitude of this work. This is a project which will appeal in every member of the congregation and we feel certain that everyone will be proud to be listed in the complete report of all contributions to be made at the end of the campaign."

Book by Avery Dulles Recommended by Daily For General Reading

Auburn—"Lucid in style, subtle and refined in argument, suffused with the candor of a great conviction, this story of a conversion deserves many readers of all faiths."

This is the estimate of "A Theological of Grace," the new book by Avery Dulles, native of Auburn and son of John Peter Dulles, which appears in a prominent editorial page review in the Auburn Citizen-Advertiser, Dec. 27, 1946.

"The Catholic," the book with a joyful sense of triumph, the reviewer states, "Protestantism, we like to think, will read it no less anxiously and with no less respect. For it makes plain, what is suggested by innumerable evidences in the world around us, that a vital Protestantism must provide some answer to the choice of modernity, and not merely a justification and an excuse for its persistence. Avery Dulles has secured himself for an answer to that choice, the best of his generation join him in the search; how many may yet accept the same answer as himself."

The review recalls that Avery's grandfather was a professor at the Auburn Theological Seminary and pastor of "Our Second Presbyterian Church." His father is not only one of our leading authorities on international affairs, but is one of the most influential laymen in American Protestantism. (Editorial note: Avery recently was received into the Catholic Church and is a Jesuit student at St. Andrews-on-the-Hudson.)

The prominence of the Dulles family, the reviewer says, its association with Auburn, and its long connection with the Presbyterian Church, gives a special interest to a small book which has recently been published by Avery Dulles, recounting the journey which led him from a materialistic philosophy to belief in God, and brought him finally to Catholicism.

"Whatever young Mr. Dulles family may think of the end to which these spiritual quests have led him or whatever his distinguished Presbyterianism forbears might have thought they must all realize that in intellectual brilliance the book is worthy of the family tradition."

"It is a beguiling work composed (as its author states) during a period of relative leisure at sea during World War II."

Continuing the review, the Citizen-Advertiser states: "Mr. Dulles arrived as an undergraduate at Harvard in 1926, his mind hardened in the assumptions which were common to a whole generation. We know them well; there is not anyone who was connected with our schools and universities in this period who will not recognize in the opening pages of the book a portrait of that intellectually confused and morally anarchical scene. The philosophical belief that matter is the only reality; that religion exists only as a myth created by man to rationalize his distress; that standards of conduct are conventional."

"Mr. Dulles nowhere shows his intellectual detachment and candor more clearly than in his insistence that reason, though it led his thoughts at every stage, was not the final arbiter," the reviewer said.

"He was, he persuades in his argument that the Catholic interpretation of society is more meaningful than the unmediated liberalism of the Nineteenth Century; but he makes clear also that admiration for such Catholic doctrine is not by itself sufficient to explain conversion to the Catholic Church. He can sketch the proofs of the Church's infallibility, but he makes clear that even the most extensive historical researches leave doubts. The moving force was in the end, outside of reason. That he did eventually make the act of joining the Church 'is attributable solely' says Mr. Dulles, 'to the grace of God.'"

Father Baumann Enroute to Brazil
