Red Cross Appeal

The service of the American Red Cross is too well known to require any expecition of its activities from me. The story of the work of our great American rolled orquals in the late war, the ready gentlemen in every columby, and the routes day by day activities in so many folder of these are too well known to require much explementon. What is important, however, is to realise that these projects require vant sums of money if they are to be maintained at their traditional efficiency and improved, as they must be from Year to year.

At this time each year the Red Cross appeals to every American to do his duty to the organisation which stands ready to do its duty to him when the emergency demands. May I personally commit this great national project to the democosity of every one.
