Tiso Execution Seen As Political Blunder

By JAN MAUTHNER
(Special Correspondent, N. C. W. C. News Service)

Bratislava, Slovakia — "Tiso will be more dangerous dead than alive."

This was the opinion expressed by a leftist Slovak journalist after the death sentence was pronounced against the former president of Slovakia, and it summed up the feeling of all Slovaks, even the top executive in the administration, with the exception of the Communists. They all agree, Communists excepted, that Dr. Tiso's execution was an enormous political blunder.

No stage of the trial took on so dramatic a character as the last 48 hours before the wartime president's execution when the main question was whether the sentence would be carried out or not.

In Bratislava and in Prague the various parties held meetings behind closed doors to decide whether clemency for Dr. Tiso should be recommended to President Edward Benes of Czechoslovakia. Despite the fact that all participants in these meetings were pledged to secrecy, various details have leaked to the public.

The Communists did not appear at a Bratislava meeting to appeal against clemency for Dr Tiso. However, various Communist groups voiced the demand that the court's verdict be carried out.

Government Gets Protest

Dr Joseph Lettrich, the president of the Slovak National Council, received threatening letters from both sides, causing considerable nervous tension. He did not want to accept responsibility for Dr Tiso's execution so he washed his hands of the whole affair by declaring that the National Council was not in a position either to recommend or oppose the petition for mercy. The only action he took was to send a telegram to the Prague government protesting its decision, after the government had decided against clemency for Dr. Tiso.

While the people kept outward calm during these tense hours, it was easy to see the concern on their faces about the fate of their former president. Complete strangers, who had probably seen me in the court room, questioned me in the street on how matters stood. Up to the last moment the great majority of the Slovak people did not believe that Dr. Tiso would be hanged.

At present there is still calm throughout Slovakia. The population is apparently aware of the consequences that might follow demonstrations. It is unlikely that the last wish of Dr. Tiso to be buried in his old parish, Banovce will be fulfilled for fear that the people will make the town and his grave a national shrine.

Dies in Cassock

Dr. Tiso himself demonstrated a sereneness in his last hours that astonished many. He listened to the death sentence in complete calm. He received the news that his petition for clemency had been refused without show of emotion. He went to the gallows apparently in unruffled peace.

Perhaps he was the only one who never had any doubt about the outcome. Many weeks previously he had told his lawyer that he had made his peace with the world and would go to the scaffold in complete calm. Some people had thought that he would leave the world with a final political statement. They were wrong. He finished his career as he had started it — as a priest. He spent the night before his execution in prayer with a Capuchin priest and at the very moment that he was hanged he was praying in Latin. He died in his clerical cassock.

Even some Czech papers are declaring that Dr. Tiso's execution will hurt Czechoslovakia abroad and will disturb relations between Czechs and Slovaks for a long time. Immediately

Church Builder Its 1st Convert

Stratford, Vt. — (NC) — The architect of the construction superintendent, who by duty supervised the building of the new chapel of St. Eugene, Wells River, Vt., and spent his evenings taking instructions in the Catholic Faith from the Very Rev. Joseph E. Stanwell, C.S.S.R., Superior of the Redemptorist Fathers here, will receive the deferatory conversion.

The convert, Charles W. Wilmington, a World War II veteran, declared: "I am personally built the Communism-built cal Mit Brennender Sorge appeared.

This document had to be distributed in Germany under the most difficult circumstances and yet was got into hundreds of thousands of hands through Catholic couriers, as the communist press itself reluctantly had to admit at the time (1937).

The Papal attempts to assuage the horrors of war and to win peace were in the interests of a world now stricken with the sufferings created by the conflict. The Papal declarations on social reform and for the working people would lead to benefits for the common man which the red fascist slave state can never confer.

Communists Stir Fool

No matter how false, that propaganda started by Melnikov was like a rock thrown into a pool. The communists spread it far and wide. It had to be taken up by every communist editor and used, in such ways as the conditions in his country permitted, to undermine the Catholic Church.

It led American communists to come forward with the infamous article in the April 1946 Political Affairs, slyly insinuating that there should be a Protestant reaction against "growing Catholic wealth and influence." It was in that article, too, taking the lead from Melnikov, that the communist duty was set down to separate the laity from the Hierarchy, and to initiate such attacks on the Catholic Church—when feasible—as that forged at Cardinal Spellman by the communist underlings in New York.

The campaign of misrepresentation against the Catholic Church and her spiritual leaders continues with full force in the press of New Times. Further consideration of that will be given in the article next week, and also in the book which accompanies it. That book is entitled upon by communist leaders, as they say among themselves, to "pull the wool over Catholic eyes."
