Keeps Pupils Healthy at St. Mary's

Record Backs Elmira School Boast Of Best Recreational Program

Boys and girls of St. Mary's Parish, Elmira, boast of "the best athletic and social program of any parish in the Rochester diocese."

This sounds like a proud exaggeration until you meet Allie P. Quatrano, their full-time physical director and study the busy schedule of activity for all the young people of the parish that crowd the excellent school gymnasium and the large playground.

IT WOULD tire anyone to keep up with Quatrano's strictly planned 8-hour daily program that keeps St. Mary's 420 youngsters so happy and active. As a member of the faculty, he teaches the 5 upper grades 21 classes a week in Science, First Aid, Safety Education and Health. Each class in the school has regular weekly, and sometimes twice weekly, gym classes, where he instructs in calisthenics, games, marching drills, and even folk and tap dancing. He supervises a frantically enthusiastic Inter-Class League for noon hour and after school competition. The boys all learn touch football, basketball, track, soccer, handball, baseball, hockey and boxing; the girls participate in volleyball, softball, field hockey and shuffleboard.

The games attract every pupil in the school from the fourth grade up. Quatrano claims, for he does not pit one class against another, but puts players from several different grades on each team in the various leagues. "The competition is terrific," he admits, "and we turn out players that know their games well."

Quatrano picks his school teams from the whole league. "Last year," he said, "we didn't lose a game in basketball and we were not even scored on in touch football. My hardball team was one of the best in the city. And in all these competitions we played the finest teams we could find."

In addition to his teaching and supervision of athletics for the grammar school, Quatrano is the parish scoutmaster, director of athletic and social programs for the 185 high school students of St. Mary's who use the gym two evenings a week, and supervisor of a weekly program of sports for the veterans of the parish.

A NATIVE of Elmira, married and the father of a six-year-old son, Quatrano came to St. Mary's after 15 years of service at the Elmira Neighborhood House where he was director of physical education and later executive director of all activities. He was trained in athletics and "boy work" at such schools as Notre Dame, Cortland Teachers College, Long Island University and the American College of Physical Education in Chicago.

The Rev. Thomas J. Toole, pastor of St. Mary's, enthusiastically praised the value of the extensive athletic program for the whole parish. "By these classes and supervised athletics and the influence that Mr. Quatrano has made on all the children," he declared, "the physical education program has become the most important feature of all our parish activities.

"Ours is the first parochial school in the diocese," Father Toole said, "to have a complete physical education program in accord with the New York State school laws. As a direct result of wholesome athletic activities
