But greater then the tribute Irlend was the dramitic tribute of Monsigner Hart's own feelings. His eyes were filled with tears of genuine sorrow and his voice was choked with

"You have lost a great friend. haven't you, Mousigner?" We tried to offer our sympathy.

"Oh, yes!" and the vicar general's eyes filled again with tears and emotion freighted his words. "We've been together and known each other since we were boys." He could say me more. He turned and wallend into the night. Only the darkness could hide the awful grief -a grief unleashed when a priestly friendship was painfully severed by the sharp sword of death.

It is a sermon more eloquent than words to see one great priest weep for another great priest in that tragic hour when the angel of death steps between them and breaks the friendly ties of a lifetime.

MONSIGNOR BERGAN'S death, two days before Christmas, brought memories to many priests of the Rochester Diocean particularly "the Bergan men"-the men who made their preparation for the priesthood at St. Andrew's Seminary during the years that Father Bergan served on the faculty as a professor and disciplinarian.
