THE PRESIDENT'S propos als to the Congress reflect, for the most part, some good so cial justice to to a tog. which should be appreciated by at least those Catholies who have some understanding of the principles of Catholic social teaching:

It is wholly quitair to charge. as Mr. Truman's political oppunerin are charging, that the Productio proposals to Cangress are the tespiration of demagoguery and leftist think-is it demagoguery of democ racy to ass, as the President did that discrimination based on rare, or croed, or colar be abottshed? lo it Communism or Christianily to ask Congress to protect effectively the civic and economic rights of negroes as well as whiten?

is it demagniquery to demand that the minimum wage be raised to 75 cents an hour from the present "inadequate and obsciete" level of 40 cents? If this proposal makes the President a leftwing demagogue then hundreds of Catholic social experts are in the same class. Is it demagoguery to eas that every American family has a right to a decent home and that the government should aid public housing for the benefit of low-income famliles? Anyone who calls this proposal leftist has never heard of Pope Plus XI, the great social-minded Pontiff of our own time.

NEITHER IS THERE anything demagogic or leftist in the Freedent's proposal that "we should now extend unemployment compensation, old age benefits, and survivors' benefits to millions who are not now protected." Catholic editors have been urging the same thing for a long time and have criticized the fallure of the present Congress to do anything about it during its last "Until we can overcome the present drastic housing shortage, we must extend and strengthen cent control." the President stated.

He also urged the adoption. in order that our people may not suffer because they cannot afford to pay for adequate medical care when they need it.

Are these admirable suggestions inspifed by demagogues and leftwingers? To say so, is to give them an unmerited

We regret, however, that the President did not indicate more clearly that any program of federal aid should be made available to all American children who need it, both those in private schools as well as those in public schools. Other proposals of the President included support of the Marshall Plan for aid to Europe, support of the United Nations, aid to China, and an income tax credit of $40 for each taxpaver and each dependent Again it is difficult to see how any congressman. who is seriously interested in our nation's welfare, can raise the cry of "demagoguery" at these proposals or suggest that the President has taken to reading the Communist Daily

CONGRESSIONAL critics of the President's proposals for improving the social condition of our people might find this a good time to read one of the greates passages in the social literature of our age or any other age. How many who listen to Mr Truman's demand for decent homes, minimum wages, extension of social security benefits and adequate medical care for everybody who needs it, will recognize the auther of these words:
