Hollywood Rosalind Russell's Role

By W. H. MORSE

"How do Catholic actors and actresses react when they are asked to play in objectionable movies?" Are they told under what obligation to refuse?

This double-barreled query has been brought up at many of the Te Deum Functions which form the major part of my weekly speaking itinerary through the Middle West. Often the query is put by non-Catholic people, quite legitimately, to put on the spot those Hollywood celebrities who while known to be Catholics, have not always refused doubtful assignments.

Currently, "Mourning Becomes Electra," because it has been highly touted by certain film critics—notably by some Catholic people, quite legitimately, to put on the spot those Hollywood celebrities who while known to be Catholics, have not always refused doubtful assignments.

In the first analysis, however, her skillful use of silence may do more than prove her proficiency in her art. What has this example of that proficiency achieved? That is the underlying question upon which all these people who act merely to be sensational and maybe to enjoy a sense of exhibitionism, base their query.

What, for instance, induced Rosalind Russell, a Catholic actress to accept the principal role in Dodie Nichols' adaptation of the mournful Eugene O'Neill story of the Manuski family. Most of its members were mentally and morally twisted.

The mother (Kathleen Paxton) took away the admirer of her daughter (Rosaline Russell) and accepted him as a lover. She caused the death of her husband (Raymond Massey) whereupon the daughter, consumed by jealousy, and her goaded her brother (Michael Redgrave) to shoot the man. Together they told their mother her lover had been murdered and mocked her grief so that she committed suicide.

EVEN BEFORE this it was apparent that the relationship between this mother and her son, a war-wrecked youth, was at least in the emotional sense, an unnatural one. Once the mother had committed suicide, her daughter began to grow so much like her that her brother developed this same strange and repulsive interest in her and in him.

Both brother and sister had suitors but their efforts to restore balanced and natural interests within the family were fruitless and eventually the brother killed himself. The sister, now spurned by the man who would have married her and correctly described by him as evil and wicked, shut herself in the family home had the shutters bolted and vowed to make it her grave. "May God forgive you" were her fiancé's last words to her and to this she replied, "I

Catholic Radio Station Closed

MEXICO CITY — (UPI) — The Catholic radio station, "Pax," is the capital of Guatemala has been suppressed by the government, according to "Excelsior" Mexio City daily. The newspaper interpreted the government's action as a reprisal against recent criticism of its policies by Catholic leaders.

Excelsior recalled that previously two Catholic weeklies, Verbum and Action Social Christians, were banned by government officials after the Guatemalan hierarchy had issued a pastoral letter against Communism.

The newspaper reported that the Most Rev. M. Nossel, Archbishop of Guatemala, has sought an injunction against the forced closing of the "Pax" radio station on the ground that the Guatemalan constitution guarantees that no radio station or newspaper may be seized without judicial process.
