Why any film producer in his right-senses would cast Ingrid Bergman in a story like this is beyond me.

Consistently the critics and the public have liked Bergman films in which her native nobility of character has been given a chance to show.

SHE EARNED MORE credit and rolled up more money at the box office with her Sister Benedict in 'The Bells of St. Mary's," than with anything else she ever did.

Yet, in spite of these facts, an "enterprising" producer gives her presented later. the role of a loose woman who through part of the story is seen in an alcoholic stupor.

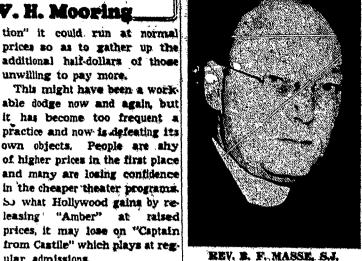

On top of that he almost had the audacity to raise admission prices and pretend that his film is another super attraction. At the moment he has thought better of it and intends to release the film as if it were "just another movie!"

You see the impression Hollywood is creating by this stupid price-raising policy Everytime a picture is lauded to the skies. up goes, the price.
