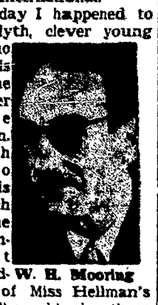
Hollywood
The Hopeless Hubbards
By W. H. Mooring

Dan Duryea, writing recently to thank me for an appraisal of his work, mentioned his latest movie role in "Another Part of the Forest," Lillian Hellman's play just filmed by Universal-International.

The same day I happened to meet Ann Blyth, clever young character, who incidentally, is a Catholic. She mentioned her role in the same film. They both seemed to think that this story, which deals with the Hubbard family we first met in Goldwyn's movie of Miss Hellman's "Little Foxes," would give them important opportunities as artistes.



W. H. Mooring

So when later I attended the press preview of "Another Part of the Forest," I looked for a special treat. The film is not one of those Hollywood things concerned with sex morality.

It takes us back into the history of the Hubbard family 20 years earlier than "Little Foxes," thus reversing the usual progress of screenplay sequels.

IF YOU REMEMBER "Little Foxes," screened eight years ago, you may recall that the Hubbard's were a money-crazed bunch whose principal object in life seemed to be to outwit each other in a scramble for personal gain. "Another Part of the Forest" suggests that the trouble was hereditary. In it Duryea plays the father of the fellow he portrayed in "Little Foxes" and Vladimer Pozner who adapted Lillian Hellman's stageplay to the screen, emphasizes that his was a case of "like father, like son."

Ann Blyth as his sister, Edmund O'Brien as another brother and Frederic March as their father, are all greedy, vicious characters without a spark of family affection between them. The only decent member of the Hubbard family is mother, played by Florence Eldredge.

She strives hard to kindle a little family feeling among them. She tries to persuade her husband, who made an illicit fortune out of salt during the war between the North and South, to make amends by endowing a hospital. He promises but reneges again and again.

Her own son urges her to leave her husband, but she points out that Christian marriage involves sacred and unbreakable vows which she intends to keep.

Her performance like that of all the others, Duryea, O'Brien, Blyth and March especially, is a great one from the acting point of view, but what does the story tell us?

MISS HELLMAN, in her original play, indicted greedy people and to the last upheld Christian virtue and fortitude of the mother who on the stage, was seen, her ideals intact, about to found a hospital for the poor.

Emphasis upon the evils of materialism was so developed as to make it appear that behavior typical of the Hubbards is to be expected among the wealthy, but the Christian attitude was never left in doubt.

On the screen, things end up very differently. The mother is seen walking out on her family with a parting line. "I don't like any of my children," a sentiment with which the average audience is apt to sympathize, but which implies that the Christian influence is impotent. Mother simply quits.

She leaves her husband in the clutches of their elder son who is blackmailing him out of his whole fortune. The other children are bent on fighting for their share.

ONLY THE COLORED servants have ever shown Mother the slightest human kindness. It appears that screen writer Vladimer Pozner, presumably with Miss Hellman's approval, has sharpened the suggestion that there is no hope for the Hubbards, who in a motion picture such as this cannot fail to symbolize a whole class.

Miss Hellman's views on class are well known.

The fact that she has, herself, grown wealthy in the exploitation of them, is less likely to impress itself upon the millions who patronize this picture, than the moral to be so readily drawn from the screenplay itself.

"Another Part of the Forest" becomes, therefore, one of those disparaging, mischievous motion pictures which, by steady and mounting process, turns the minds of millions from all faith and hope in spiritual devices and realities, to the snaring creed that after all, money is what men are here for.

Nazareth Girls Produce Saturday Radio Plays

The Nazareth Academy Radio Workshop is putting a series of dramatized youth programs on the Saturday afternoon airwaves over Station WRNY (680 kc.) at 1:15 p. m. weekly. Directed by Sister Evelyn S.S.J. of the Academy faculty the girls write their own scripts and produce the shows in "big-time professional style". The current series is entitled "Careers for Life". The dramas show the Catholic approach to choosing a life work and the obligation which young people and parents have to give prayerful thought to vocational plans.

THE GREATEST STORY Ever Told, weekly drama of religious interest based on Biblical quotations from the life of Christ, presents "Unto These, My Brethren" this Sunday at 6:30 p. m. on Rochester station WARC (950 kc.) The play tells of the charity of an old man who gives food, money and transportation to many who are in need, thus sacrificing his chances to fulfill a long felt desire: to see and speak to Christ.

THE SACRED HEART PROGRAM, produced each weekday morning at 6:45 a. m. over Rochester Station WRNY (680 kc.) offers a spiritual beginning for the day with the Angelus, morning prayers, a short sermon, and music by the St. Louis University Choir. Timed for the convenience of families at the rising and the breakfast hour, this new daily feature is becoming a religious "habit" in many homes of the diocese.

"INDUSTRIAL PEACE" is the timely topic of the Rev. Benjamin Masse, S.J., labor editor of America, on this Sunday's "Catholic Hour" over Buffalo Station WBEN (930 kc.) at 6 p. m. This is the last in a series of 4 talks on the theme of religion in economic life. The Sulpician Seminary Choir of Washington will sing.

"THE CATHOLIC CORNER" on Station WHEC this Sunday at 10 a. m. presents the school choir of St. Francis Xavier Church, Rochester in a program of sacred music directed by Sister Mary Damien, S.S.J. The Rev. John T. Callanan and Rev. Joseph L. Hogan will give short religious talks.

Giveaway In Reverse

The rash of giveaway shows is reaching alarming proportions. Pretty soon you won't be able to tune in your radio without having a load of washing machines, pre-fabricated houses, refrigerators, television sets, and other costly objects thrown at you by the sponsors.

Bill Smith

I say the thing is getting bad, but some change in the trend is noticeable. Newest wrinkle is a show on Station WNEW in New York called "Anything Goes" and run by two gentlemen named Rayburn and Finch. These two told their listeners that instead of giving anything away on the show, they wanted the listeners to send in "a thing" to the station.

The result was that the station got more than a thousand rare and varied objects. Winner of the contest was a woman who sent in her husband. Said Mrs. Norton—the lady who was so generous—of Mr. Norton, "He'll clean your studio, shine shoes, run errands, etc."

Reward for this act of self-abnegation was that the boys did their show from the Norton apartment a few days ago.

What will they think of next?

QUADRIPLE THREAT MAN. This week this column had a visitor on the occasion of the annual meeting of the National Council of Catholic Men. This man, Dick Hobbs, is a disk jockey, engineer, and announcer on one of the stations in Detroit. He is also radio chairman of the Detroit Council of Catholic Men. So you see, on four counts he is interesting.

A very grand guy who knows radio and works in it every day, doing a show from 6:00 A.M. to 11:00 A. M., he is thoroughly steeped in radio and knows his business. He has also done a fine job for Catholic radio in Detroit. Through his efforts, seconded of course by the Diocesan Council, he has been instrumental in getting all the Catholic network shows carried in that area, plus special Catholic shows, like the Bishops' War Relief programs, and local live Catholic programs.

The Church can point with pride to Dick because of the great job he has done for Catholic radio, and this is just a sample of what can be accomplished if professional radio men are called upon to get into the Catholic radio picture in their cities and dioceses.

Let's have more of them.

TV GETS ITS MAN. This column, always on the side of law and order, is pleased to report a new development in the field of television. Out on the West Coast Station KTLA in Hollywood is cooperating with the Los Angeles Police Department in airing each night at 7 P. M. still pictures of wanted or missing persons.

Anybody who is an avid reader of the "Wanted Persons" posters that grace our post offices (and this columnist is such an avid reader) will readily agree that this is a much superior way to keep abreast of the crime problem.

Now if television will only do something about putting into the post offices better ink and pens that really write, I shall be doubly grateful.
