Retreatants' 'Apostleship' Praised by Bishop, Judge

Laymen who make closed retreats and who urge others to do so are performing "a definite apostleship," His Excellency Bishop Kearney told over 300 members of the Laymen's Retreat League at their annual dinner Monday night (Nov. 8) in Rochester's Powers Hotel.

THE NEED of retreats also was stressed by John A. McKenna of New York City, former Rockland County Court Judge, principal speaker at the dinner, which was a testimonial to Bishop Kearney, who this week (Nov. 11) marked the 11th anniversary of his installation as Bishop of Rochester.

The Very Rev. Augustine J. Aylward, C.S.S.R., director of the Retreat League, lauded Bishop Kearney's "magnanimous thoughtfulness of others," and declared that retreatants have "no greater friend than our Most Reverend Bishop."

Hailed by Father Aylward as "the great builder," Bishop Kearney responded that "future generations in our diocese will owe a great debt to the Redemptorist Fathers and to you men who have built up this magnificent organization of retreatants."

REFERRING to the late Pope Pius XII's "great interest in the retreat movement," the Bishop chose as the theme of his message a letter issued by the Pontiff during his Golden Jubilee in 1929, which urged clergy and laity to promote weekend retreats, to the end that men "may put on Christ."

"Pious retreats," the Papal letter declared, "compel the mind of a man to examine more diligently and intently into all the things that he has thought, or said, or done; they assist the human faculties in a marvelous manner, so that the mind becomes accustomed, in this spiritual arena, to weigh things maturely and with even balance; the will acquires strength and firmness, the passions are restrained by the rule of counsel... and the soul attains its native nobility and altitude."

Bishop Kearney noted that "only such introspection under the glare of God's refulgent light of truth and morality, will disclose man's true condition. Retreatants bring themselves, he added, "into the arms of Christ."

AN APPEAL "to approach nearer to God by contributing to the welfare of our fellow creatures" was made by McKenna, who is now engaged in the private practice of law in Nyack and New York and is active in the lay retreat movement there.
