The federation, representing 7,200,000 workers, asks a four-point federal aid program:

(the term "teacher" to be defined in the bill), to be administered by the public education authorities of the State.

2. Federal aid for services for all children 5 to 17 years of age, to be administered by such public agency as would be permitted under State law to administer such a program for all children.

3. Federal aid for scholarships to enable needy children and youth to remain in school; the payments to be made public agency.

4. Federal aid to wipe out illiteracy in this country. "Since World War I, the American Federation of Labor has actively sought federal aid for education," declared the A. F. of L. policy-makers, "Legislation has failed of enactment because certain organized groups are unwilling to permit all children to share in the benefits of such a program. Until this intolerance is overcome by an articulate. concerted movement to assure the benefits of federal aid aid legislation.

"It is an empty right," the policy statement continued to allow the existence of parochial schools for the use of those children whose parents, in good faith, believe they should send their children to such schools, if sur rovernment, while recognizing this right at the same time denies the children who attend these schools such services and such privileges as will protect their very health and majety."
