Syrian-Melchite Parish Marks End of Church Debt

Congratulations and commendations to the pastor and people of St. Nicholas (Syrian-Melchite) Parish, Rochester, were voiced by His Excellency, Bishop Kearney, who presided at the Oriental Mass and the burning of the mortgage of the Eastern rite church last Sunday.

Bishop Kearney lauded the efforts of the Syrian Melchites in wiping out the debts of the 28-year-old church and in maintaining their spiritual vigor and religious ardor.

Although the liturgy and language of this Byzantine (Eastern) rite church differ non-essentially from those of the Latin (Western), there is fundamentally one God, one faith, one Baptism, the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Andrew Hallak, pastor, explained. "We are all united in Christ at the consecration of the Mass, regardless of the tongue spoken," he pointed out.

THE BYZANTINE rite, he said, is one of the earliest rites used in the Christian Church, dating back in the form used by the Syrians to the liturgy of St. John Chrysostom. Greek and Arabic are the languages employed.

He outlined the history of the little Remington street parish, paying tribute to the 24 pioneering families who planned the first church and, not content with raising the $10,000 building fund, dug out the foundation with their own hands. Urging the young people to emulate the example of their parents, the Bishop asked the blessing of God on the work of the future. Archimandrite Hallak celebrated the Mass and officiated at the mortgage burning robed in the elaborate vestments of the rite. One participant described the rich liturgy of the oriental Mass and the Arabic music as "a profoundly moving religious experience."

In the sanctuary with Bishop Kearney were the Rt. Rev. Monsignors William M. Hart, P. A., V. G., Edward M. Lyons, and Wilfrid T. Craugh; the Very Rev. Msgr. James C. McAffir, chancellor of the Rochester Diocese; and the Rev. Fathers John E. Maney, Charles J. Azzl and Leo C. Mooney.
