Sally, Student Nurse, On Pediatrics

Almost with open arms Sally was welcomed to Pediatrics, or the children's floor of the hospital. A little colored boy was absorbed in his book, and nothing would raise his curly black head until he had finished the page he was reading.

Sally was somewhat startled but oh, so much pleased when his big, shining eyes looked up from the book and rested on the trim happy student.

"Good morning, you are new nurse and I'm glad to see you here," were the words that escaped the red lips enclosing the pearly white teeth of our little patient. Goodness, did he look happy as he raised from the bed on one elbow and looked at Sally. But she was ten times happier as she raised to her full height and straightened her blue and white striped uniform, filling the room with the rustle of her starched-filled, immaculate white apron.

This little boy was full of the spirit of youth and Sally knew that it would be a new challenge to her, caring for children like him.

SHE HAD TALKED with Betty, a graduate nurse, who knew about the children she had taken care of at the hospital where she had trained. She found that the normal behavior of children is further exaggerated in a child that is ill or recovering from some disease.

Betty had told her about little Harry who had been stricken with infantile paralysis the summer before, along with several others who were recuperating along with him. Harry received physiotherapy on his weakened

Auxiliary Formed By St. Bona Alumni

Newly organized Ladies Auxiliary of the St. Bona Adventure Alumni Club of Rochester will entertain members of the club and their friends at a dinner at Mike Conroy's on Saturday, Feb. 19 at 7 p. m.

All reservations must be in by Feb. 11 according to Mrs. Joseph Demerath, committee chairman. Assisting Mrs. Demerath are Miss Raymond Sommer, Mrs. John McNeil and Mrs. Edward Esse.

Another little heartbreaker with the same ravenous disease was five year old Larry. He was as black as a shiny new pair of shoes and his hair was as curly as any little girl who had just had a permanent wave.

While Larry was having his daily morning bath the ward would echo with his favorite song, "Let It Snow." Larry had a little help in singing at times when Gerald, another colored character who was only two and a half would try to render a few musical words as Larry sang and danced with his big dark eyes moving around in circles to the delight of everyone.

Sally always enjoyed these stories that Betty told her, and was anxious to see if she would have as much pleasure taking care of children. Sally need not have worried one bit for the children all fell in love with her and her sunny smile, and she did every little thing she could for them. She felt sorry for them every time she had to hurt one with a needle to give the vital Penicillin which was all-important in hastening their recovery. She minded seeing them receiving blood or glucose intravenously, but gradually became accustomed to it, and knew that they were as brave as older people when it came right down to it.

Sally spent time on the three to eleven shift, and also on the eleven to seven. Several times she had had emergencies admitted late at night and had had to hurry about making preparations for the new patients who might have pneumonia or possibly an acute appendicitis. As she had experienced in the Operating Room, it seemed like day instead of night when an operation had to be scheduled immediately, and so many preparations had to be made.

Queer as it might seem, Sally was saddened everytime one of the babies or younger children was discharged. She became so fond of each and every one, that she minded having them go home.

When Sally's time on Pediatrics was nearly up, she really found it hard to leave the children. However, she knew that her time there had been precious to her, and she had certainly learned a great deal about caring for children, whether they were very sick or almost well. She dreaded seeing them ill and therefore worked hard to make them well again. It certainly was wonderful to help children who really should never have anything wrong with them, but should always be happy and full of health and sunshine.
