Catholics Offer Health Plan

not only a basic doctrine of the Church, but it is the cornerstone of American life," they assert. The Catholic groups say that "in accordance with sound social doctrine, we invoke the principle of subsidiarity."

"We submit," they say, "that a program of service by voluntary associations and private initiative backed by the government financial support is more in keeping with this sound social principle than a federal compulsory health insurance system."

"In order that the moral and social principles which underlie the consideration of a National Health Program may be safeguarded and in order that the legitimate autonomy of hospitals and professional groups may be fully preserved," the three Catholic agencies present a program which recommends:

THAT A DIVISION of health be created within the Federal Security Administration with responsibility for the health service functions and activities proposed. The division would be directed by a Federal Health Council composed of nine members, three of them physicians, three hospital administrators (one a nurse) and three representatives of the public.

health councils at state and local level of the government in the administrator be the executive official levels.

That the Federal Security Administration of health, with a qualified physician as his assistant in charge of the Division of Health.

That the Federal Government increase its grants for hospital construction under Public Law 725 and that it grant a subsidy to help defray operating costs in areas of need.

THAT THE FEDERAL Government assist medical schools with grants in aid for facilities and instructional costs; establish scholarships for medical students and financial support to encourage physicians to go into the least favored areas; appropriate funds for medical research.

That a similar program be established for dentists, nurses, and other professional personnel.

That the Federal Government assist in construction of community health centers in rural areas of special need; that every effort be made to stimulate enrollment in Blue Cross, Blue Shield and other voluntary insurance plans; that Congress extend the benefits under the Social Security Law so as to include disability due to sickness in the same category as unemployment.

THAT CONGRESS authorize assistance to the states in providing health care for the group in the lowest income brackets and for those without any income. These funds should be made available for the purchase of Blue Cross, Blue Shield and other forms of voluntary health care. Also that each state agency, subject to the approval of the Federal Health Council, establish a program to purchase service on a basis of payment of costs for hospital service and on a fixed fee basis for medical and surgical service.

That to meet widely varying problems of the respective states, and to conform to the existing facilities of each area of the country, Congress appropriate $10,000,000 to assist the individual states to make available at their own option a system of payment of costs of hospital medical and surgical care for their respective areas under the following conditions:

1. Federal grants in-aid to be distributed on a sliding scale and on a state matching basis in accordance with the pattern established in Public Law 725.
2. That states desiring to avail themselves of federal grants establish a state health insurance agency with a council authorized by the governor to determine policy and approve regulations.
3. That the state health agency be authorized to purchase health protection through the Blue Cross Blue Shield or other voluntary agencies or to establish its own health insurance system if it is found necessary. The coverage should include hospital service and medical and surgical care.
4. The insurance premiums should be graduated according to the coverage described in the policy adequate to establish necessary reserves and sufficient to insure the benefits promised as well as to provide security of the operation as a self-sustaining program according to actuarial principles.
5. THE INSURANCE plan should establish a fixed fee schedule of payments for medical and surgical care within a hospital and payments to the hospital by contract for the cost of service on a per diem basis.

6. The state health insurance plan should be made available at county or local health agencies to any resident of the state at his own option and on payment of the established premium.

Thus under localized sponsorship and administration health care by prepayment of cost on an insurance basis could be obtained by all residents of a state. At the same time, there would be developed a strong incentive to utilize the voluntary systems and extend this coverage.

"We do not ignore but rather emphasize," the Catholic groups state, "the existence of a concomitant responsibility of society to create such conditions that the individual can readily achieve a state of physical and material well-being. It is the business of society through private and voluntary associations as well as through public agencies to see to it that the necessary means are available for the social welfare of the individual. It is not, however, the business of the state to assume all the functions of society, nor to relieve the individual of his own responsibility and deprive him of his freedom of choice."
