Puppets Like Real People Charm Kids of Every Age

Chicago The puppet show "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" for the simple reason that it seems so real, has adults as interested as children in the "strange doings of the Kukulapoltan world on NBC-TV each night at 7 p. m.

Kukla is an earnest little puppet, a born organizer and worker. Everybody loves him. Ollie is the most wonderful dragon in the world. And Fran is tall, good humored, Francis Allison former schoolteacher, the only live person who appears in their show.

AND BEHIND the scenes is a remarkable young man named Burr Tillstrom who manipulates the puppets and provides nine sharp and distinct voices for all the parts.

Deep as always, asking Fran whether Kukla is a bald child or a little old man with a child's face. They wonder what color Ollie's fur is and whether the characters make up their script as they go along.

THE KUKLAPOLITAN world therefore has its own special frame of reference, not unlike the Land of Oz. Fran is kin to Dorothy in the Oz books. Her impact faith communicates itself to others.

Kukla she declares is what ever you choose to make of him.

Movie Industry Sees TV Boom As Helpful To Film Business

What will be television's effect on the movies? One of the motion picture industry's greatest leaders, S. P. Skouras, president of 20th Century-Fox believes a demand for even more good pictures than ever before. Skouras hopes. "Before these predictions are realized, we will go through many stormy periods," he admitted.

There is no question that the motion picture industry and radio will feel the impact of this growth of television, and that there will have to be an adjustment period.

A Chicago radio and television firm already has developed a plan called "Pi television." This would have special television stations broadcasting first run movies plays and other high quality programs.

Regardless of all this, Skouras looks for theater telecasts to be the nucleus of a new and great amusement network.

HE FORESEES the use of television to project shows simultaneously in whole circuits of theaters 200 or more at a time. These programs he said would be derived from the latest and best the arts can offer.

As seen by Skouras, these programs would be sent over "closed circuits" directly into the theaters and would not be broadcast over the air. The cost of such programs would be too great for them to be telecast into homes free of charge, he said.

Skouras said that films would remain the feature attraction with other entertainment built around them. The films would be telecast directly into the theater reducing part of the industry's overhead and distribution costs under present methods requiring a separate film for each theater.

TELEVISION WOULD enable theaters to present symphony orchestras, concert artists, popular entertainers and major public events on the same program. The result would be a great increase in theater patronage and Students Stage Prison-Camp Play The Hague (CIP) - A play that had its premiere in the German internment camp of St. Michaels during the war, was presented by Catholic and Protestant students of the State University of Leyden Sunday, June 5. The students have joined together to present each year at Pentecost a play based on a scriptural theme.

This year's presentation, "Barabbas," was especially written for enactment on Christmas Eve in the internment camp. It deals with the controversy between Barabbas, who believes that a better world can be achieved by violence only, and Ruben, who feels that love is a more powerful weapon than force and injustice and chooses the side of Christ.
