Women's Viewpoint Drive My Cars Away

Where our age is headed is a matter of serious conjecture for our heavy thinkers; how we get there seems to be the concern of the purveyors of ancient automobiles known in the vernacular as used car dealers.

PURCHASING a used car is not a matter to be launched lightly. It requires perspicacity, perseverance and ability to withstand the blandishments of Genial Joe. It also helps to be able to ascertain quickly if there is a motor beneath the newly polished hood.

Generally, then, before one can zoom into the wide asphalt yonder, behind a well behaved steering wheel, days of tortuous deliberation have gone into the decision to choose between the twelve-year old Chevrolet without front fenders and the ten-year-old Ford that sound-own, probably a bit of an aesthete, had painted the car's red like a low gear tugboat.

Smiling Sam knows well every nuance of thought along the line of argument which

At Our House A Firm Is Born

Although we don't graduate from Georgetown University until next year, a classmate, George Burns, and I could probably give a good prediction about what our commencement speaker is going to say.

AS A RESULT, at the drop of a tassled-cap we can deliver a five or fifty five minute speech, filled with the choicest of cliches gleaned from the best speakers our graduation ceremonies had to offer.

So should next year's speakers want to take notes from any of our speakers we would be glad to furnish them. If you would kindly specify in what kind of mood you want to leave your audience we are sure we could supply the phrases—COMPLETE WITH PICTURES
